Pact Nations Set Up Staffs To Defend 'Free World'

Planning Groups Of High Officers Will Map Strategy To Stop Aggression

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

The 12 North Atlantic Pact countries set up a continuing organization yesterday to plan the defense of the whole vast area covered by the treaty's terms.

A network of planning groups, made up of high-ranking officers, will work out the strategy and tactics of stopping possible Soviet aggression, and will get busy without delay.

In effect, yesterday's decisions will strengthen and sharpen the 12-nation pledge, signed in Washington last April, that an attack on one will be regarded as an attack on all.

American officers will work side by side with Canadians and Europeans on the defense problems of the whole treaty area, which stretches from Alaska in the west to the Adriatic in the east, and from the Arctic icecap as far south as the Azores and North Africa.

No Unified Command

Although no unified command under a single leader is planned, a brand-new "standing group" of three high-ranking officers—one each from the United States, Britain and France—will come into existence in Washington on a permanent basis.

Its job will be to coordinate the work of regional planning groups in each of five great regions within the treaty area.

In one of these regions, the western European, defense planning has had a head start of more than a year under the so-called Western Union agreement of Britain, France and the Low Countries. The United States has had high officers in London as observers but not as open participants in this planning work.

U. S. to Take Active Part

Now, according to yesterday's decisions, the United States has agreed to take an active part in the defense planning for the western European region. The United States will also take part, though not as a full member, in planning the defenses of two other regions across the Atlantic.

One is a southern European-western Mediterranean region, consisting of France, Italy and the United Kingdom. The British are

U. S. Policy Backed

West Agrees To Let China Go to Reds

By the United Press

Great Britain and France yesterday threw their support behind the United States' decision to abandon China to the Communists.

That indorsement of a policy that has been under bitter attack by Republicans in the United States Senate was given during a 90-minute meeting of the Western Big Three foreign ministers.

A terse communique issued at the close of the meeting said only that the three powers were "in accord" on their overall Far Eastern policies.

But informed diplomatic sources interpreted it as meaning that the British aand French agree with this Government that there is no longer any use in supporting Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist regime in China.

For the time being, at least, these sources said, the Western powers are agreed that they can do nothing directly to stop the Chinese Communists, for the simple reason that there is no co-

Chiang Pays Lobbyist Here To Get Funds

Former Member Of Christian Front Gets $25,000 Salary

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

The Chinese Nationalists have hired a $25,000-a-year lobbyist to get more money for Chiang Kai-shek and to sabotage Administration plans to withhold funds.

The international-influence man is William J. Goodwin, of Roslyn, N. Y., and the Metropolitan Club in Washington, a registered lobbyist and foreign agent with a stormy background of Wall Street finance, Christian Front activity, Tammany Hall politics and big-time public relations.

In less than two years, according to Justice Department records, Goodwin has contracted for $65,000 from the Nationalist government, first to "get help from the United States," then to influence "leaders of thought" and urge them to approve "larger measures of American support and material aid."

With this money Goodwin has given intimate dinners in Washington's exclusive clubs and hotels for more than 100 members of Congress. He has campaigned for legislators, even while registered as a foreign agent, contributed to their campaigns, and sent some of them flowers and at least one a congradulatory present. His checks for "entertainment" have run as high as $640.

Goodwin, once an arch-isolationist who has 'politicked' for both major parties and himself, admitted last week he was a member "for a short time" of the Christian Front, a strong-arm Nazi-type organization. He said he joined it "only to break it up."

He was hired first in March, 1948, by Counselor Chen Chih-mai of the Chinese Embassy, who was looking for a man who could supply Senators, Representatives and national leaders with answers to their questions about China. Chen said he had been embarrassed by efforts of Americans to lobby for China aid, some of whom asked for a 1 percent contingency fee.

When asked why his government had thought it necessary or ad-

Two More In Hungary Tell of 'Plot'

Envoy of Tito, General Confess To Making Plans For Night of Terror

Budapest, Sept. 17 (AP).—Plans for a night of terror in which Hungarian and Yugoslav plotters were to kill key Communists and seize the government were related by two defendants here today at the treason trial.

Lazar Brankov, 37-year-old counsellor of the Yugoslav Embassy in Budapest, testified that officials of Premier Marshal Tito's regime decided last October that peaceful methods were not enough to convert Hungary into a Yugoslav satellite and that "other methods should be used."

These other methods, he said, included the dispatch of "two experts in political murder" to Budapest to shadow the Communist chieftains and kill them when the revolt signal was given.

Trial Called a Fake

Yugoslavia has denounced the trial in advance as a fake. Eight men, headed by Laszlo Rajk, are up before a five-judge People's Court on charges of treason and espionage.

Brankov and Lieut. Gen. Gyorgy Palffy made public confessions before the court today, speaking with the same alacrity Rajk displayed yesterday. Brankov pleaded "partly guilty," Palffy said "guilty."

The paunchy general, 40, testified he had maneuvered Hungarian army affairs in an effort to support the plot. He said he hoped the revolt would lead to creation of a "Western-type capitalist democracy."

Supporting the government's charge that Britain and the United States were involved, Brankov said all the secret information obtained by Yugoslavia's Hungarian agents was turned over to the United States Legation here and leading Yugoslavs also exchanged information with their British counterparts.

Names OSS Official

Both he and the general said Alexander Rankovic, Interior Minister and Police Chief of Yugoslavia, was the brains behind the plans.

Brankov charged that Allen W. Dulles, head of the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) in Europe during World War II, was linked with the purported plot. He said Winston Churchill, Britain's wartime Prime Minister, sought early

French Arrest 2 More in Dress Smugglers' Ring

Paris, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Dress pirates probably succeeded in copying the most popular designs of all the top fashion houses and smuggling the patterns to New York, a Surete Nationale official admitted today.

Police tonight arrested two more persons for alleged complicity in the ring of pattern smugglers. They continued to withhold the name of the young American model whose brief arrest last month brought the pirating to light.

500,000 Due To Quit Coal Pits Monday

Industry Braced For General Strike Even in Absence Of Order by Lewis

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The coal industry yesterday braced itself for a general walkout of some half-million miners, expected to get under way Monday.

John L. Lewis, who had been threatening strike all last week, maintained an Olympian silence on the subject.

There were rumblings in the coal field regions, however, that the miners themselves—without any direct signal from their leader—would stay away from the pits in protest against suspension of welfare fund benefits.

The coal strike appeared to be in the making at the very time that leaders of steel management and labor were preparing to meet here Monday with Federal Conciliation Chief Cyrus S. Ching in an effort to avert a steel strike scheduled for 12.01 a. m. next Sunday, September 25.

Many Accept Parley Bid

Ching disclosed that a large number of companies had joined industry-dominant United States Steel in accepting his invitation to the conciliation parley. Philip Murray, president of the CIO Steel Workers, will also be on hand.

The Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service would not comment, but another high Government official said yesterday that a general coal strike would complicate the Government's efforts to mediate the steel dispute. With coal on strike, it was pointed out, there would be less urgency on the part of steel management and labor to settle their differences, inasmuch as steel production depends on the coal supply.

Meanwhile, a coal industry leader disclosed yesterday that the mine operators, in the dark as to John L.'s specific intentions, were expecting a "spontaneous" walkout to occur in both the anthracite and soft coal fields.

Such a walkout appeared to be shaping up.

Some 8000 miners stopped work Friday in the Utah-Wyoming region, asserting they were tired of working without a contract. The United Mine Workers' contract with the operators expired June 30. Since then, at Lewis' behest, the miners have been working despite their traditional policy of "no contract, no work."

Word from Indiana

There was unofficial, but authoritative, word from Indiana that the 8500 miners in the State would not show up at the pits on Monday. At Johnstown, Pa., three UMW units voted to stay away Monday, and a fourth local is understood to be similarly planning on staying home. At the U. S. Steel Robena mine south of Pittsburgh, the UMW local also is reported to have decided on a work holiday.

Similar reaction was apparent

FLAMES ENVELOP THE CRUISE SHIP NORONIC AT HER TORONTO PIER

(From Press Dispatches)

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17.—A raging, pre-dawn fire, blamed on a careless smoker, brought death to possibly 207 vacationists aboard the Canadian pleasure cruise ship Noronic here today.

Awakened by screams and smoke at 2:30 a. m., hundreds of others scrambled or jumped to safety through flames that turned the 36-year-old "Queen of the Great Lakes" into a blackened, sunken hulk at her dock here.

The Canadian Red Cross submitted the following unofficial casualty list at 9 p. m. tonight (EDT):

Known dead, 112. Missing, 95. Seriously injured, 110. Slightly injured, 273. Uninjured, 95.

There were 512 passengers and

Red Cross Aide Urges Local Office Inquiries

By the United Press

The Red Cross sent its national disaster director, Colin Herrle, to Toronto to help Canadian Red Cross workers at the scene of the steamship fire.

Before leaving Washington, he appealed to relatives of persons believed aboard the ill-fated vessel not to telephone to Toronto for information.

Herrle said information is being supplied to Red Cross chapters in various cities throughout the United States and Canada and that inquiries should be directed to those local chapters.

173 crew members on the ship when she docked here last night at 6 p. m. All the crewmen were safe. Most of the passengers were Americans.

Divers reported eight bodies jammed against the ceiling of a water-logged cabin. Sixty other cabins remained to be checked.

Some Burned to Ashes

Other bodies may be in the waters around the dock. Still others were burned to ashes by the roaring flames.

Although it may be days before the exact count is known, Toronto Mayor Hiram McCallum estimated the death toll at "close to 200."

Canadian Steamship Lines President K. R. Marshall said he did not believe the final death toll would be more than 135. It was Marshall who blamed the fire on a "cigar or cigarette," left in a cabin by one of the passengers.

Trapped on Lower Decks

A large number of those aboard were killed, despite the fact the dock was so near, because they were trapped on lower decks from which there were few exits, rescuers said.

Men, women and children, screaming with terror, were burned to death in the corridors and on the decks of the ship. Others were trampled to death in an hysterical mob fight. Some suffocated in their cabins as they slept. Several drowned when they leaped overboard.

Within 15 minutes after the first alarm at 2:30 a. m. flames had swept the entire 390-foot, 6905-ton ship. Survivors told of panic-stricken struggles in smoke-filled corridors and around lifelines dropped to the dock.

Ben Kosman of Cleveland, who fled to safety, told of seeing ship attendants trying to stem the roaring flames with hand extinguishers.

"They might as well have tried to put out Hell with their fountain pens," he said brokenly.

Whole Families Wiped Out

Whole families, vacationing on the Noronic's last cruise of the season, were wiped out. Firemen got aboard the heat-twisted steel hull five hours after the fire began. They told of finding charred groups with their arms about each other.

Many were trapped in their cabins.

"Some of those people were partying and after they had gone

And Hysteria Everywhere

Survivors Tell of Heroism, Cowardice on Blazing Ship

Toronto, Ontario, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Survivors of the Noronic disaster told today of heroes and heroines who fought on the ship's blazing decks to save others. And they told dark stories of cowards who obeyed the frantic law of "every man for himself."

Ben Kosman, a Cleveland businessman, was one of the heroes. He stayed on the burning ship for a full hour, helping other passengers to safety, before he was driven off by the flames.

He said a woman ran to him with her nightgown blazing.

"She collapsed, crying in my arms," Kosman said. "I smothered the flames and half-dragged, half-pulled her to safety."

Kosman said he fought his way back to help others and rescued two more hysterical passengers before he was blocked by flames on his fourth attempt to reboard the cruiser. And then terror seized him.

"After it was over, I got hysterical myself," he said. "I started screaming for my friends who were in our party."

Kosman darted through the corridors of St. Michael's Hospital screaming "Katz, Limolli, Merzger. I've just got to find Benny. He's my best friend."

Miss Sylvia Carpenter of Detroit, a heroine of the disaster herself, told a story of three cowards.

"Someone had thrown a rope ladder over the dockside, but it was all tangled up," Miss Carpenter said. "Then a rope was tossed over the rail. I put a hitch knot in it to hold it to a stanchion.

"As I did, three men pushed in front of me and shoved some screaming out of the way. The men went down the rope.

Miss Carpenter helped several others to safety, then escaped herself.

Miss Alberta Agala of Detroit told of blind hysteria.

"The Noronic's A deck was a complete scene of panic," she related. "There was a mob of men and women surging back and forth. Men were pushing women around and many were knocked to the floor.

"There was so much panic I don't know how these people got segregated to find a way to safety. I slid down a rope."

C. E. Metcal of Columbus, Ohio, praised the work of firemen and policemen.

"It was terrible, watching the people, watching the people jump

125,000 More U. S. Workers Joined Unions in Past Year

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

Federal employes are joining unions in record numbers.

In the past year a minimum of 125,000 additional Government workers have become members of unions. The actual number may well be substantially larger since there are scores of local and agency groups that couldn't be checked by this survey.

If the unprecedentedly high induction rate continues, a majority of Uncle Sam's hired hands soon will be union members. Federal workers have been slow and difficult to organize since their unions don't have collective bargaining, union shop, dues checkoff, and other such provisions that have benefited organizations of private employes.

The American Federation of Labor claims to have signed up more than 100,000 Federal workers in the past year, and today it says it represents about 500,000 of the two million persons in Government. Most of the AFL employe groups are having their best year in history.

Independent employe groups also are booming and they, too, are making excellent membership gains.

CIO's left-wing United Public Workers is the exception to the trend. Federal employes have left it in large numbers because of its Communist-apologizing leadership. If present plans are carried out, President Philip Murray will get the group thrown out of the CIO next month. On the other hand, CIO's new Government Workers Union, a non-Commnist organization, reports substantial membership gains, as do several other CIO groups in Government.

In just those AFL unions whose membership is made up exclusively of Government people a net membership gain of 85,400 over the past year is reported by Thomas C. Walters, operations director of the AFL's Government Employes Council. In addition the AFL has a score of other unions, mainly in the crafts and trades, that take in Federal worker members and they, too, report gains in their Federal locals.

All AFL unions that have Government employe members are members of the Government Employes Council. Mr. Walters of the council reports the following progress by unions whose mem-

Home Care for Indigent Sick Is Planned by Gallinger

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

The new administration of Gallinger Hospital is aggressively pushing plans to give home medical service to the city's indigent sick, it was learned yesterday.

Purpose of the service, it was said, is to reduce long-time hospitalization costs of the aging and chronically sick who, under medical supervision, could be cared for in their own homes.

Benefits of the home medical care service, however, are not solely economic, explained Dr. Joseph F. Fazekas, new chief medical officer at the municipal institution. It would prove invaluable, he said, in the hospital's program of training medical students and young physicians.

Outside - the - hospital medical service, he said, would give Gallinger medical students and interns some of the "lost advantages" of old-time medical apprenticeship, when medical graduates attached themselves to experienced doctors and "learned to fight sickness in its own environment, the family home," Dr. Fazekas said.

Any final plans for extension of Gallinger service to District homes, Dr. Fazekas explained, must necessarily have congressional authorization or approval.

The system would speed hospital discharge of patients by pro-

Firms Defying Union Face Drivers' Strike

Upset the Dope

Ford, CIO Confer On Pension Plan

Detroit, Sept. 17 (AP).—Ford and the CIO United Auto Workers upset the labor-management dope bucket today by going into extraordinary weekend sessions to work on a pension plan.

The company and union had been touching on the subject off and on during contract negotiations for three and a half months.

But the general feeling had been that they were only marking time until the presidential fact finding board made its recommendations for the steel industry. The panel's report was made a week ago and a further delay was expected in the auto and other negotiations pending a steel industry settlement on that basis.

The new move lent credence to widespread reports that Ford, although it may not have a concrete pension proposal, has at least given the union "something to nibble on."

But UAW President Walter Reuther and Ford Vice President John S. Bugas still refused to confirm or deny these reports.

After another fruitless bargaining session yesterday with spokesmen for Washington trucking firms, Charles J. Bell, head of Truck Drivers Local 639 (AFL), announced union drivers will strike against firms which will not meet their demands.

Bell said he will contact the Trucking Association today to 10 member firms of the District sound them out individually. Four of them already have told him that to avert a walkout they will grant the 17-cents-an-hour boost the union asks, Bell said.

Bell and Joseph McGarraghy, attorney for the labor relations counsel of the association, reported after yesterday's negotiations that the wage issue remained deadlocked. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, McGarraghy said.

He asserted that the employers' offer—13½ cents an hour over the present $1.15—would remain the same. No further sessions have been scheduled, he said. He added that Bell had informed him of the possibility of a walkout, and termed it the "usual union strategy."

Bell, however, declared that trucking firms employing about 300 of the union's 450 drivers have signified to him they will meet the 17-cent increase rather than undergo a strike.

The union leader said that those firms who do not give in to the wage demands over the weekend will be struck. He said he doubted there would be a walkout before Monday.

Striking Baltimore drivers last Wednesday accepted the same increase offered here, 13½ cents an hour, and returned to work. Spokesmen for drivers in Washington point out, however, that Baltimore's boost was tacked on to an hourly wage of $1.21½ cents.

Meanwhile, the strike of 175 union employes of the Smoot Sand and Gravel Corp. over a wage dispute ended its third week without immediate prospect of bargaining sessions. The employes are asking for a raise of 25 cents an hour.

U. S. Workers Join Unions

bership is made up solely of Federal workers:

The National Association of Letter Carriers, whose president is William C. Doherty. Membership of 99,000, an increase of 30,000 over last year.

National Federation of Post Office Clerks, whose president is Leo George. Membership of 90,000, a gain of 29,000.

American Federation of Government Employes, whose president is James Yaden. Membership, 52,000, a gain of 22,300 in the past year.

Railway Mail Association; president, Robert Rice; membership, 28,436, a gain of 3000; National Association of Postal Supervisors; president, John A. McMahon; membership, 15,100, gain of 1000, and Special Delivery Messengers; president, George Warfield; membership, 2200, a gain of 400.

The independents have prospered by the trend toward unionization of the Federal service. For example:

The National Rural Letter Carriers is one of those rare groups that have a membership of 100 percent plus. There are approximately 32,000 rural carriers and the NRCA claims about 33,000 member. Some of the carriers who retired and substitute carriers are active in the group, accounting for the 100 per cent plus membership. The union has 100 per cent membership of eligible carriers in 32 States. Willard L. Manning is its president.

The National Federation of Federal Employes, the oldest and largest union of its kind, is accepting applications for membership at the rate of 1500 a month and it has grown by 10,000 in the past year, according to Secretary-Treasurer Gertrude McNally. NFFE President is Luther C. Steward.

The United National Association of Postoffice Clerks, a pioneer employe group, claims a membership of 40,000, a gain of 5000 over the past year. Its president is William Armbrust.

The National Association of Employes of Collectors of Internal Revenue, a relatively new group, has a membership of 14,000, a gain of 4000 in the past year. Its president is Charles Rockwood.

Also reporting membership gains are the National Customs Service Association and most other independent unions.

The largest percentage gain goes to the National Association of Retired Civil Employes. This group of retired Federal workers had fewer than 9000 members three years ago. Today it has 42,000 members and its rolls are growing daily.

Congress is credited for the sharp trend toward unionization of Federal workers. In fact, it openly invited classified workers to organize a year ago when it voted the highly and effectively organized postal workers a flat $450 pay boost and held unorganized classified employes to a $330 raise. The record of Congress shows that it has been more liberal over the years in dealing with organized groups.

With the real possibility of another pay boost pending, Federal workers are joining unions in droves. Postal union leaders can point to their excellent record of gains for their employes and let it speak for itself.

Classified union leaders can point to the postal employes and say to their members: "Look what they've been able to accomplish through organization. If you want proportionate pay raises—organize as they have."

The tactics are highly successful.

Cripps Home, Calls Mission 'Successful'

London, Sept. 17 (AP).—Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer, returned home today and told reporters his Washington dollar talks with United States and Canadian officials were "the most successful we have ever had."

"We feel that we have accomplished quite a lot for the near and immediate future," he said.

"The tone and degree of collaboration which we received—and which I hope we also showed—means that much more can be done toward solving the sterling-dollar problem."

The labor government's political foes took a different view. Anthony Eden, deputy conservative leader, told a party rally at Norwich that the communique on the Washington talks was "an expression of hopes rather than of constructive proposals."

Sir Stafford's return was delayed several hours by a breakdown of his British Overseas Airway plane at Gander, Newfoundland. He switched to an American Overseas Airlines plane for the remainder of the trip.

Cripps reported to Prime Minister Attlee a few hours later..

Key Republicans Undecided On Making Fight on Minton

By The Associated Press

Key Republicans hadn't made up their minds yesterday whether to fight President Truman's appointment of Judge Sherman Minton to the Supreme Court.

Senator Wherry of Nebraska, the GOP floor leader, told a reporter it would be up to Senator Jenner (R., Ind.) to signal whether party members pitch in to oppose a former Indiana Senator who took a leading part in President Roosevelt's ill-starred effort to revamp the Supreme Court in 1937.

Jenner said he hadn't decided whether he will fight Minton, who served from 1935 until 1940 when he was defeated for reelection.

Wherry said that since Jenner is a member of Judiciary Committee and Minton is from the same State, other Republicans were looking to Jenner for directions on the appointment.

Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.), who has been in the forefront of opposition to several of President Truman's appointees, also said he wanted more time to study Minton's record.

In any event, Democrats remained confident they could win approval of the nomination, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice Wiley Rutledge.

But Senator Magnuson (D., Wash.) conceded they may have to wait for the return of Chairman McCarran (D., Nev.) from a three-week European trip before they can get clearance on the appointment from the Judiciary Committee.

McCarran, on the opposite side from Minton in the fight in Congress over the court bill and on other issues, told Senator Kilgore (D., W. Va.) by trans-Atlantic telephone he wants the nomination handled in the routine way.

Kilgore may head a subcommittee, with Senators Eastland (D., Miss.) and Donnell (R., Mo.), to consider the appointment.

Members of the committee who asked not to be quoted by name said McCarran was so sure in his own mind that President Truman was going to name Attorney General J. Howard McGrath to the post that he agreed before he left that such a nomination could be speeded through the committee in his absence.

Few Senators think that McCarran, at odds with the Administration over the House-approved displaced persons bill he is holding in his committee, will openly oppose Minton.

Senator Byrd (D., Va.), who led the successful fight to scuttle the Carl A. Ilgenfritz nomination in the Senate Friday, indicated he hasn't any present intention of fighting Minton's appointment.

T-H Violation By Vandalism Laid to Union

A National Labor Relations Board examiner yesterday declared a Columbus, Ohio, local of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers had violated the Taft-Hartley Act by strike violence and vandalism.

He found it guilty of:

1. Arming pickets with rocks, chunks of concrete, baseball bats and iron bars, and stabbing a newly hired worker.
2. Damaging automobiles, assault on a plant official and two nonstriking employes.
3. Forcing a worker, former head of the local, to quit his job as a result of a union "kangaroo court" action.

Examiner James A. Shaw recommended that Local 536 of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers at the American Zinc Oxide Co. should post notice that it will not restrain or coerce employes.

The examiner's findings and recommendations have the effect of a board order unless challenged in 20 days.

The company had refused to bargain with the smelter workers unless the officers signed non-Communist oaths, which is required by the Taft-Hartley Act for a union to be eligible to use the NLRB's machinery.

A strike of the CIO local began August 13, 1948. The company signed a contract with the AFL International Chemical Workers Union on the following February 1. Picketing was still in progress last March, when the examiner held his hearings.

Union Scores 'Slowdown'

London, Sept. 17 (AP).—Union leaders urged half a million British railwaymen today to abandon their threatened slowdown for higher wages.

The appeal by the National Union of Railwaymen came as a new rash of wage disputes spread over the British Isles, involving four million organized workers.

Despite the appeal, the union's Warrington branch voted to start a slowdown at midnight tonight.

At Southampton 900 men announced a slowdown starting Monday.

More than 500,000 London transport workers who operate the city's bus and subway systems will meet Monday to vote on a slowdown.

The confederation of shipbuilding and engineering unions, with 2,500,000 workers, voted yesterday to press for wage increases.

Northern Ireland's strike of 3000 electrical workers for higher pay went into its second day with sailors and soldiers working the generating plants.

Coal Industry Is Braced for Strike Monday

in eastern Pennsylvania's hard coal area.

The prostrike sentiment has been noted among the miners since July 1, when Lewis ordered them to work only three days a week in order that there might be a sharing of the available work. This feeling was given strong impetus on Friday when Lewis announced that the 10-million-dollar-a-month benefits of the soft coal miners' welfare fund had to be suspended because the fund was threatening to go into the red.

In the past year about 375,000 miners and their dependents have benefited from the fund, built up by 20-cents-a-ton contributions from the mine operators. The fund's income, however, has been sharply decreased since July because of the shortened, three-day workweek, and because a group of Southern operators has refused to continue the royalties without a new work contract.

Since spring, off and on, Lewis and his aides have been holding negotiation sessions with the operator organizations, without reaching any agreement. Lewis is understood to want a shorter workweek and increased welfare royalties among other contract improvements.

Shortly after the soft coal welfare fund payments were suspended, similar suspension was announced for the anthracite fund benefits. The former fund was suspended as of yesterday; the latter as of the end of the month.

Lewis or his lieutenants will meet with the Southern operators at Bluefield, W. Va., next Tuesday; with the Northern and Western producers at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., on Wednesday.

He would not confirm or deny that a strike was impending in the coal field, although he made several implied threats to call one last week in demanding that the Southern producers end their "strike" against the royalty payments.

Meanwhile, on the steel front, Philip Murray hurled another verbal blast in what Federal Conciliation Chief Ching has dubbed "debate by telegraph" between steel management and labor. The debate has been going on since the steel fact-finding board recommended that the steel workers withdraw their wage-increase demands and that the steel companies bear the full cost of a pension-social insurance program, to cost a maximum of 10 cents an hour per worker.

Murray quickly accepted the report in its entirety; the steel companies have anounced their willingness to continue collective bargaining on the basis of the recommendations. Murray has insisted that the companies first accept the recommendations, as he did, before going ahead with further negotiations.

Yesterday, for a third time, Murray charged that the steel industry is "coldly preparing to force a strike." He derided the companies' statements that they were opposed in principle to paying the entire cost of social insurance and pension program.

For an official of the company to receive a pension aid for solely by the company is a good thing, Murray declared sarcastically, but for the worker to receive the same benefits is a "loss of his freedom." The Steel Workers' chief listed "outstanding examples" of steel officials who will be eligible for pensions paid for entirely by the company, among them:

U. S. Steel, Benjamin F. Fairless, president, $50,000 a year, and Anders M. Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee, $50,000 a year; Bethlehem, A. B. Homer, president, $110,460 a year; Allegheny Ludlum, Hiland G. Batcheller, president, $40,000 a year (for "consultant services"); Jones & Laughlin, Ben Moreel, president and chairman of the board, $25,000 a year.

Senate Gets Arms Aid Bill Monday

By The Associated Press

The Administration's $1,314,000,000 foreign arms aid bill comes up in the Senate Monday accompanied by a formal report cautioning that Russia has five million armed men and apepars to be deliberately building up her military strength.

The Senate Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees, which held joint sessions on the bill, formally urged its pasage in a report to the Senate made public today.

The report said that:

Russia's military budget is up 19 per cent over last year;

She has increased her troop strength in Germany from 70,000 men to 100,000;

Soviet Increasing Strength

The Soviets are taking "increased security measures" along their borders and those of their satellites; and

Russia's ground forces "are estimated to be in better condition that at any time since the war."

The two key committees said these developments meant that:

"In the fact of the complete demobilization of the forces of the United States and the European nations, and without a competing program of military improvement, Soviet policy has been and is to increase its military strength.

"This policy is apparently a deliberate one on the part of the Soviet government and would exist whether or not the program of aid to free nations is undertaken by the United States."

The report said the arms program would not overstretch the resources of the United States "nor in any way weaken the combat effectiveness of our own military units or forces."

The arms aid bill is part of the broad strategy of the western world to discourage Soviet aggression.

Senator Connally (D., Tex.), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, expressed hope for early action on the bill. Numerous amendments have been prepared for introduction.

George to Seek Slash

Senator George (D., Ga.), who ranks next to Connally on the Foreign Relations group, wants to cut the fund for arming western European signatories of the Atlantic Pact from one billion dollars to 300 million dollars. Connally predicted that the George proposal would be one of the main issues to be disposed of by the Senate and that it would lose.

The committee report said that the bulk of the European aid must go to France, because that nation's potential military assignment must be to furnish the core of ground resistance to any aggression from the East.

Korea, the Philippines, Greece and Turkey, and conditionally, China, also are ticketed for a share in the funds under the Senate bill.

Officials Gather

Achesons Receive Pact Envoys

By Elizabeth Maguire
Post Reporter

Foreign Ministers here to attend the Atlantic Pact meeting were honored by Secretary of State and Mrs. Dean Acheson at a reception last evening at Larz Anderson House.

Other guests at the small reception were the Ambassadors of the Atlantic Pact countries and some embassy staff members, State Department officials and a few Congressmen.

The guests were received in the trophy room by the Secretary and his wife and proceeded to the ballroom, where the scarlet-coated Marine Band was playing, and onto the terrace where refreshments were served.

Bevin Unable to Attend

Present at the reception, which lasted from 6 to 8 p.m., were all the foreign ministers who were present at the morning session, except Ernest Bevin of Great Britain, who was represented by the British Ambassador, Sir Oliver Franks, and Luxembourg's Joseph Bech, who was represented by the Luxembourg Minister, Hugues Le Gallais.

The Icelandic Ambassador, Thor Thors, represented his country at both the morning session and the reception.

The Foreign Ministers who attended the reception were Lester B. Pearson of Canada, Count Carlo Sforza of Italy, Robert Schuman of France, Paul van Zeeland, Belgium's new Minister for Foreign Affairs; Denmark's Gustav Rasmussen, Dirk U. Stikker of the Netherlands, Halvard M. Lange of Norway, and Dr. Jose Caeiro de Mata of Portugal.

Other Guests Listed

Among the others who were gathered at the palatial Anderson house, said to have been influenced in its architecture by the palaces Anderson admired in his tours of duty as Ambassador to Japan and Minister to Belgium, were Ambassador and Mme. Henri Bonnet of France, the Netherlands Ambassador and Mme. E. N. Van Kleffens, Baron Silvercruys, who is Belgium's Ambassador; Mme. Le Gallais, Lady Franks, Mme. Thors, the Norwegian Ambassador and Mme. Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, Portuguese Ambassador Pedro Theotonio Pereira and Senhora Manuel de Rocheta, wife of the Portuguese Counselor.

Also the Italian Ambassador and his wife, Signor and Signora Alberto Tarchiani, the beautiful and fair-haired daughter of the new Belgian foreign minister, Mlle. Micheline van Zeeland; Mrs. van Zeeland, Danish Ambassador Henrik de Kauffmann, and Senators Tom Connally and Arthur Vandenberg.

Secretary Explains

Chatting with guests, Secretary Acheson expressed pleasure that at the morning session "we worked out the organization of the Western World in 53 minutes."

Mrs. Acheson figured this to be a bare 4½ minutes for each of the participating countries. The trick, the Secretary explained, was that preliminary meetings had been held and only the few points not resolved in advance had to be brought up this morning.

Mrs. Acheson received in a steel-gray dress with a hat of gold felt decorated with gold feathers. Fashion occupied some of the conversation, even at a party studded with such eminent statesmen, and Mme. Bonnet—who was wearing a Dior gown of raw beige silk—reported that 13 inches from the floor is the correct hemline for street or cocktail wear, according to French style experts.

Wallace Says Cold War Aids Business

Cleveland, Sept. 17 (AP).—Henry Wallace said "the cold war and the gigantic arms program which accompanies it had been immensely profitable for big business."

"This," contended the former Vice President, "provides the incentive to take over control of the Government itself in order to perpetuate the cold war policy and the profits which are its product."

He added, "The cost of the cold war deprives men and women in this country and everywhere throughout the world of the economic and social security without which military security is worthless."

Lists Five-Point Program

Wallace, Progressive Party presidential candidate in 1948, spoke at the opening session of the party's National Conference on Jobs and the Economic Crisis.

Nowhere in the world can there be a general democratic welfare state," Wallace said, "until the United Nations is converted into that kind of organization which President Roosevelt wanted it to be."

This was the program he presented:

1. Stop interfering in the internal affairs of other nations, either directly or through the U. N.

2. Renounce all military alliances.

3. Give economic help to other nations only through the U. N.

Urges Understanding

4. Arrive at such basic understanding with Russia and England that general disarmament becomes practical for all nations.

5. More positive recognition by the U. N. of the right of the colonial peoples to live their own lives free from exploitation.

The welfare state, which he predicted is on the way for the U. S., the former Secretary of Commerce and Agriculture said, "does not require Government ownership of all the means of production . . . but it may require Government guidance of many key industries."

Representative Marcantonio (A. L.P., N. Y.) told the Progressives in another speech, "The Eightieth Congress was the worst. The Eighty-first Congress is the phoniest."

Pact Nations Set Up Defense Plan Command

considered essential to the defense planning of this area because of their strategic bases at Malta and Gibraltar.

The other is a northern European region, consisting of Denmark, Norway and the United Kingdom. Here, again, Britain is included because Scandinavian defense is so largely based on British sea and air power.

The two remaining regions of the five include the United States as a matter of course. One is the Canadian-United States area, already covered by Canadian-defense agreements; the other is the North Atlantic Ocean region, comprising 10 countries with Atlantic coastlines—namely, all of the pact countries except Italy and Luxembourg.

It took the Ministers of the pact countries just one hour yesterday to agree to the new organization, which had been worked out in more than a dozen previous meetings of subordinate officials. The agreement was embodied in a 2600-word communique amounting to a charter of the new organization, at least at its highest levels.

Yesterday's meeting took place behind the strongly guarded doors of the Interdepartmental Auditorium on Constitution ave., where the treaty was signed in a historic ceremony last April.

All but one of the 12 who attended were Foreign Ministers of their respective countries, the exception being Thor Thors, the Icelandic Minister here, who represented his government. All but one of the Foreign Ministers had been here in April to sign the treaty.

Newcomer Is Belgian

The newcomer among the Foreign Ministers was Paul Van Zeeland of Belgium, who succeeded Paul-Henri Spaak as Foreign Minister last month.

The 12 ministers met as the North Atlantic Council. The Council had been set up in the treaty itself as the supreme body responsible for carrying out its terms.

The agreement yesterday provided that the Council would normally be made up of Foreign Ministers; would meet in ordinary sessions once a year, during and near the session of the U. N. General Assembly, and could meet in emergency session at any time, with the Washington envoys of the member countries taking the place of their Foreign Ministers if necessary.

Below the council there was set up a civilian Defense Committee consisting, normally, of the Defense Ministers of the various governments. This committee was told that it should "immediately take the requisite steps to have drawn up unified defense plans for the North Atlantic area."

The Defense Committee plans to have its first regular meeting in Washington October 5, with Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson as its American member and its first chairman. Its job, according to the communique, will be to recommend ways and means of mutual defense, in line with general policy guidance that will come from the council.

General Lines Suggested

Military organization under the pact will not be final until the Defense Ministers have worked them out. The general lines, however, were "suggested" by the Foreign Ministers yesterday.

There will be, to begin with, a military committee of one chief of staff, or his representative, from each of the 12 countries. Since Iceland has no army and no chief of staff, it may have a civilian on this body if it wishes.

It will be up to this group, the communique said, to "recommend" to the Defense Ministers the military measure needed for the unified defense of the North Atlantic area.

The communique implied, however, that the 12-man military planning staff would be cumbersome, and that subcommittees would be needed to make its work "rapid and efficient." The main subcommittee, therefore, will be the American-British-French "standing group" of three men, which will be "so organized as to function continuously."

The five regional planning groups, in turn, will make their recommendations to the Chiefs of Staff through the three-man "standing group."

The Foreign Ministers also set up working groups of officials yesterday to plan two other intergovernmental mechanics under the pact. One would deal with the question of military production and supply, the other with economic and financial factors affecting defense.

Although most of the long communique dealt with organizational details, its preamble did reaffirm the purposes of the treaty.

"The meeting of the council showed," it said, "that all parties are united in their resolve to integrate their efforts for the promotion of lasting peace, the preservation of their common heritage and the strengthening of their common defense."

4th U. N. Day Plans Develop

Groundwork for celebration of the fourth anniversary of the United Nations here, has been laid at a meeting of the District of Columbia Citizens Committee for United Nations Day.

Melvin D. Hildreth, chairman of the local committee, outlined plans for United Nations Day, October 24, and continuous observance of the U. N. founding for the week following, at a meeting Friday.

About 20 committee members heard of plans for extensive public relations work by press and radio representatives. Posters will be placed on streetcars and billboards, and the League of Women Voters will set up booths at bus, train and airplane terminals and outside the Capitol Theater.

Austin Cheerful On Opening of U. N.

Lake Success, Sept. 17 (U.P.)—Warren R. Austin, permanent American delegate to the United Nations, tonight said the General Assembly will open Tuesday in a favorable diplomatic climate, "the kind in which reasonable men can come together."

The statement was made in a radio broadcast.

The former Vermont Senator recalled the gloom at the Assembly meeting last year in Paris.

In the opening Assembly speeches, delegates frankly talked of the "apprehensions of their people that war might break upon them."

Austin said that since then, the Berlin crisis had been eased, the Palestine armistice had been negotiated and fighting had been halted in Indonesia.

He said there is good reason for hoping the forthcoming Assembly will solve the Italian colonies question.

"When men stop being afraid," Austin said, "they begin thinking in terms of the substance of the problems before them and their real solution."

Prague Claims Catholic Won Over

Communist Propaganda Here Charged

By The Associated Press

Testimony that "official representatives" of Yugoslavia have directly aided Communist propaganda activity here was made public last night by a Senate Judiciary subcommittee.

The witness was Dr. Slobodan M. Draskovich, a refugee from Tito's Communist regime in Yugoslavia. Now living in New York City, he formerly was an economics professor at the University of Belgrade.

The committee, holding hearings on a bill to raise new barriers against the entry of subversive aliens, took his testimony this month behind closed doors. The offensives enumerated all took place before Marshal Tito's break with the Russian-dominated cominform.

Secretary of State Acheson's opposition to the proposed legislation was disclosed Friday. He said it would seriously interfere with the conduct of foreign affairs and might force a break in diplomatic relations with Communist-dominated nations.

Dr. Draskovich told the committee that representatives from Yugoslavia "did not respect" the rule that they "were supposed not to meddle in internal politics or make Communist propaganda."

They have taken part in many Communist-led "celebrations" organized among Slavic groups, he said, and their speeches there were of "direct help" to Communist propaganda in America.

A committee questioner observed to the witness that a Draskovich report given the committee contained information "concerning involvement" of the Yugoslav Embassy staff and the Yugoslav delegations to the United Nations in Communist activities.

No Comment

A spokesman for the Yugoslav Embassy said it would have no comment, at least until officials had had a chance to study Dr. Draskovich's testimony.

In New York, Dr. Joza Vilfan, Yugoslav delegate to the United Nations, described as "utter nonsense" the testimony that the Yugoslav delegation to the U. S. was involved in Communist activities.

Dr. Vilfan said that Dr. Draskovich was a "known partisan" of Gen. Draja Mihailovic, who was accused by the Tito regime of collaborating with the Germans. The general was executed for treason.

Dr. Draskovich said that Maj. Branko Vukelic, whom he described as at one time connected with the Yugoslav Embassy in the United States, "was certainly one of the most active propagandists among the Yugoslav officials coming to the United States."

In 1946, he said, Vukelic went "as far as to defend in the most categorical terms the ill-famed Yugoslav secret police, OZNA, which other people usually avoid to speak about."

The ironic twist to the story, Dr. Draskovich related, is that Vukelic sided with the Cominform in its split with Tito and he now "is in the hands of that very OZNA he praised as being the people themselves."

Home Cited

The "American Yugoslav Home" in New York City was regarded by the witness as "the main center of Communist activities among the American Yugoslavs in this country."

He said that "I notice the consul, Miodrag Markovicch, is a regular visitor. It is almost his second office." Dr. Draskovich added, though, that he is not sure if that is still the case. "But definitely before the break with the Cominform and even later, he was a regular guest at the American Yugoslav Home," he said.

He said one of those connected with the home is Toma Babin, "one of the most active Communists of Yugoslav origin in this country."

Babin also is president of the Yugoslav Seamen's Club in New York City, Dr. Draskovich said, and has stated that many of the members it has trained now occupy responsible positions in Yugoslavia.

The bulk of Dr. Draskovich's testimony was devoted to documentation of his statement that the Narodni Glasnik and Slobodna Rec, Slav language newspapers published in Pittsburgh, are Communist organs.

Charles Vuich, editor of the Slobodna Rec, had this brief comment at his Pittsburgh home:

"This isn't the first time that the Solobodna Rec has been smeared by reaction and its stooges. Draskovich's testimony is unworthy of a reply."

Pope Honors Hearst

Castel Gandolfo, Italy, Sept. 17 (AP).—Pope Pius XII today granted a papal decoration to William Randolph Hearst, United States newspaper publisher.

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—The official government news agency claimed tonight that a high-ranking member of the Catholic Church apparently had deserted the Vatican and gone over to the communist government side in the bitter church-state dispute.

It said Frantisek Onderek, apostolic administrator of a diocese in the Polish border region of Czechoslovakia, had approved a Communist-sponsored proposed law which would, in effect, turn priests into civil servants and put the clergy under tight government control.

The agency, in announcing Onderek's support, made a violent attack on members of the "higher clergy" which it said, were using "terror" to force priests to protest the church law.

Azores-New York Plane Is Missing With Two Aboard

New York, Sept. 17 (AP).—A small, single-engine plane is missing tonight on a planned nonstop flight from the Azores to New York.

Nine American and Canadian search planes fanned out over the Atlantic in a widespread hunt for the plane.

The little plane—a modified Beechcroft Bonanza—carried two Italian aviators who took off from the Azores at 5:13 a. m. (EST) yesterday. They hoped to land at New York's LaGuardia Field—2000 miles away—at dawn today.

The plane was piloted by John M. Brondello and Camillio Barioglio. They had sufficient fuel to keep aloft through 10 a. m. today. In their last radio report the airmen fixed their position at about 940 miles northeast of New York and 180 miles south of Newfoundland, in a drizzling rain.

The fliers reportedly carried an inflatable life raft, distress flares and portable radio transmitter.

The nonstop flight was planned to promote American support for a proposed "boys' town" in Italy.

Last week a clogged fuel line forced the fliers to land in the Azores after their takeoff from Lisbon.

LORD MILFORD HAVEN — MRS. ROMAINE SIMPSON

London reports that they will be engaged

Ex-D. C. Woman's Betrothal To British Marquess Reported

London, Sept. 17 (AP).—The name "Mrs. Simpson" was whispered around the Royal Court today like a breath from the prewar past.

This time it was Mrs. Romaine Simpson, lovely former Washingtonian. She was reported engaged to handsome David Michael, Marquess of Milford Haven, a great-grandson of Queen Victoria.

Mrs. Simpson is 27. The marquess, one of Princess Margaret's favorite dates during the past year, is 30. A night club enthusiast, he also has gone out both here and in the United States with Sharman Douglas, daughter of United States Ambassador Lewis Douglas.

Another of Victoria's grandsons—now the Duke of Windsor—gave up the throne in 1936 so that he could marry another Mrs. Simpson. That, of course, was Wallis Warfield Simpson, Baltimore divorcee.

The Church of England frowns on remarriage of divorced persons. The Duchess of Windsor has yet to be received by the royal family.

The London Daily Mail got in touch with Milford Haven just before he pulled down the shutter on the press.

The Mail said he declined to affirm or deny the engagement report, but he did disclose that he and Mrs. Simpson have had their picture taken together by Baron Nairum, a court photographer.

Nairum's secretary refused to give out any of the photographs, but said they will be passed around, "when it becomes official."

Mrs. Simpson, a curvesome and smartly dressed brunette, came to London from Paris a few days ago.

She is the daughter of the late Vinton Dahlgren Pierce of Washington, D. C. Her marriage to William Simpson of Locust Valley, N. Y., in 1946 ended in a Reno divorce two years later.

(In Washington, Mrs. Simpson's mother, Mrs. Clark McIlwaine, of 2029 Connecticut ave. nw., said she had "no comment" on the reported engagement. She said her daughter has been living in New York for some time.)

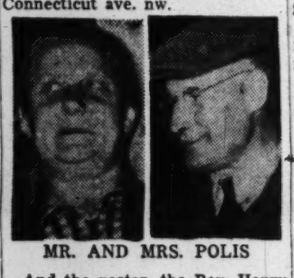
Mrs. Simpson is staying at the fashionable Claridge's Hotel. This afternoon she was "out" to callers.

At Milford Haven's home, Kensington Palace, servants said "his lordship is away."

The marquess for the past year or so has been commuting to the United States as a salesman for a British oil heater firm.

New Sexton at Church Is DP

The sexton probably will steal the show from the pastor today at St. Paul's Lutheran Church on Connecticut ave. nw.



MR. AND MRS. POLIS

And the pastor, the Rev. Henry W. Snyder, isn't one to object.

"We all have a sense of pride and responsibility in our new sexton," he said, "and I don't mind playing second fiddle."

Dr. Snyder was talking about Arnolds Polis, an elderly, academic-looking scholar who arrived with his wife in Washington last night as thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh of a group of 166 Latvian displaced persons coming to the Washington area.

The Polis couple, however, were the first sponsored by one church; the others were under individual auspices through various churches.

Polis, at 56, is quite willing to exchange a career of 35 years as a teacher and five years as a DP in Bavaria for his new role.

He and his 52-year-old wife arrived in America early yesterday morning on the United States Army transport General C. H. Muir with 1277 "New Neighbors" to America.

Last night, Dr. Snyder welcomed the couple to his church, showed them their new quarters and outlined Polis' duties. Today, Polis is ready for action.

The pair were among the thousands of Latvians who saw both the German and Russian armies during World War II as they fought back and forth across their country.

Arrangements to bring the couple to Washington were completed recently by Dr. Snyder and the Rev. Donald F. Bautz, director of the Lutheran Resettlement Service for the District.

'Plotters' Tell of Plan to Kill Hungary Reds, Seize Power in the war to promote Anglo-American influence in Yugoslavia and Hungary through spying.

Palffey, former commander of Hungary's army as chief inspector, told the court he functioned in that office as "chief of spies." He said he and his codefendants planned to kill Hungary's top Communist officials and seize the country with Yugoslav help "by the end of May at the latest." But the plan failed with the arrest of Rajk, Communist Foreign Minister who was once Hungary's police boss, May 30.

The General spoke so swiftly presiding Judge Peter Janko sometimes had to slow him down. But his tone was firm.

"We had formed three special shock groups of 12 members each which were to arrest and eventually kill the three top Communist ministers, headed by (Deputy Premier) Matyas Rakosi, on a certain night at midnight," Palffy said.

"We also planned to seize important public buildings in the Capital, which were to be occupied by 10 reliable army battalions to be brought to Budapest on this very night."

Palffy testified Rankovic promised help: "He said he would send experts and 'other things.'"

Execution of the assassination plan, he said, was assigned to Col. Bela Korondy, a former Budapest police executive and a codefendant. He said the group planned to announce "a sort of loyalty to the Soviet Union, but emphasized from the start a friendship with Tito's Yugoslavia."

As army commander, he said, he weakened garrisons on the Yugoslav and Austrian borders to "help certain elements cross those borders undisturbed; arranged with Yugoslavia to spy on Russia; and sabotaged the army by barring workers (Communists) and assigning many officers of the Royalist prewar army to important jobs.

GEN. GYORGY PALFFY
Treason trial defendant

As a young officer he had Fascist leanings, he said, and "Mussolini and his Fascist system were my ideal."

Speaking of his relations with Rajk, he said, "We were both enemies of the working class and the Soviet Union."

Rajk sat in a chair with his arms folded. He displayed no visible emotion.

The United States Legation's observer at the trial, Chris Tetroll, said he found the proceedings extremely interesting, but that any American comment must come from the State Department. The British observer also was noncommittal.

(A British Foreign Office spokesman in London said the long confession of Rajk was remarkable and added: "It leads one to wonder how many other Communists, at present spoken of with reverent adulation, may subsequently be disclosed to be spies, Hitlerite agents and Fascists.")

Brankov, following Palffy to the stand, incriminated himself, his codefendants and other persons not yet brought to trial. He spoke with a slight Yugoslav accent.

He described the prisoners, one after the other, as Yugoslav agents and declared Rajak had been their director.

"There was no secret he was not willing to deliver to us," he said.

Brankov declared United States and British military circles exerted "a harmful influence" on Yugoslav leaders even during the war.

He said Tito sent persons who refused to cooperate with the westerners "to the most dangerous part of the front." Tito's postwar plan, he said, was to "make Yugoslavia the leader of a bloc of Balkan states—bourgeoise democracies with strong western tendencies."

New York, Sept. 17 (U.P.)—Walter H. Annenberg, publisher of the Philadelphia Inquirer, said today that European Communists are "losing ground on all sides." Annenberg arrived aboard the Caronia after a five-week tour of Europe.

Battle Is Raging On Chinese Island

Canton, China, Sept. 17 (AP).—A full-dress battle was reported raging today for the island of Pingtan, just off the mainland near Communist-held Fochow.

Nationalist accounts conceded the Communists had made a successful landing, but said scores of Nationalist planes were helping the defense. The island is one of the Nationalists' blockade bases.

Otherwise, the Chinese civil war was relatively quiet. Canton army sources said a thrust by about 1000 Communist regulars to a point 125 miles northeast of Canton appeared to be merely a probing operation.

Press accounts said arsonists were blamed for a huge fire that destroyed the heart of the Taipeh business business district on Formosa Friday. Thirty buildings covering four city blocks were burned.

Vice-Adm. Russell Berkey, commanding the United States Seventh Task Fleet, visited Canton during the day and conferred for four hours with Acting President Li Tsung-Jen. Li's aides said it was only a courtesy call.

China Nationalists Pay Lobbyist Here $25,000 to Get Funds

visable to hire a lobbyist, Chen paid tribute to Goodwin's ability to win friends and influence people. He explained Goodwin was hired because he was a skilled politician who was better equipped to handle relations with Congressmen than embassy staff members.

[These facts on the mainspring of the China-aid lobby were developed in a joint inquiry by The Washington Post and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.]

Switches to News Agency

Detailed statements on file with the foreign agents registration section of the Justice Department show that Goodwin first connected with Nationalist China in March, 1948, when he was hired to interest American money in China. He worked at $40,000 a year for the Natural Resources Commission of China, a wholly owned instrumentality of the Nationalist government.

When the Chinese civil war made this work academic, Goodwin switched to the Chinese News Service, also a wholly owned instrumentality of the Nationalist government. The news service has spent $654,815.71 on Nationalist China's behalf since 1946.

His present contract, signed July 7, 1949, calls for Goodwin to "explain to leaders of thought in the United States, including members of Congress . . . the danger of the Communist movement to the security of the United States, and conversely to urge confidence in the Nationalist government of China and to seek for it large measures of American support and material aid."

For the Chinese News Service, which Chen described as a convenient agency for Goodwin to work with, Goodwin estimates he has given at least 20 intimate dinners for more than 100 Congressmen. Habitually, either Chinese Ambassador Wellington Koo or Chen are present at these functions to answer questions and give Congressmen their views on the controversial issue of aid or no aid.

While registered as a foreign agent, Goodwin said he had campaigned for several Senators, including Zales N. Ecton (R., Mont.), to whose campaign Goodwin said he contributed $500; Chapman Revercomb (R., W. Va.) and Edward V. Robertson (R., Wyo.). Goodwin said he delivered campaign speeches for Revercomb and Robertson at the request of Senator Taft (R., Ohio). Neither Robertson nor Revercomb were reelected.

Lawyer at Interviews

Goodwin said he occasionally sends two dozen American Beauty roses to Congressmen after "special victories," and has sent one Senator a present now proudly displayed. He refers to many Senators by their first names when telling of his activities.

The only reluctance Goodwin showed during the course of two separate interviews came when he was asked to name the recipients of the flowers and the gift and to name the Senators with whom he works most closely in his lobbying efforts on behalf of Nationalist China. His lawyer, Joseph Paull Marshall, of 5806 Cedar pkwy., Chevy Chase, sat in on the two interviews.

Last week Goodwin said he had converted at least 50 Congressmen, "mostly senators," to his way of thinking on China aid. He added in a confidential whisper, "China will get anything she asks for."

This mass conversion has been accomplished, Goodwin asserted, by the endless flow of letters with which he bombards Capitol Hill, the intimate dinners, plus the many personal visits he crams into three days he is in Washington each week.

He told of a long-distance telephone call he received from one Senator in which he was told, "Bill, the material you send me is the clearest, most helpful data on the Chinese situation I've ever seen."

Much of the material contained in the joint answer by Senators Styles Bridges (R., N. H.), Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), W. F. Knowland (R., Calif.), and Kenneth S. Wherry (R., Nebr.) to the Administration's White Paper had been contained in previous Goodwin letters, Goodwin said. The facts with which Senator Tydings (D., Md.) attacked Administration statistics in the White Paper also were first printed in the Goodwin letters, according to Goodwin.

Goodwin, who says he predicted Dewey's defeat in a telegram before the election, now predicts China will get far more than the 75 million dollars proposed in pending legislation. He explained "China is bound to get what she wants. Just think of the billboards next November if she doesn't."

"Under FDR, only half of Europe went Communistic—under Truman it looks like all of Asia."

"Truman can't risk that sort of thing," Goodwin said in intimating his Capitol Hill strategy. "If Acheson gets in the way and objects to more China aid, Truman will kick him upstairs or out."

Goodwin's hostility to Acheson includes the Department Acheson heads.

Although Goodwin never has been to China, he has considered himself somewhat of an authority ever since he graduated in his early 40's with the gold medal at Fordham University, where he majored in philosophy and decided to pledge himself to fight Communism.

When Chiang resigned as president of China and his successor, Li, announced he would make peace with the Communists, Goodwin said he sent a personal cable of objection to the Generalissimo in Formosa.

Goodwin said he told Chiang he could never work for anyone who compromised with communism. Goodwin was satisfied a few weeks later, he said, when by word of mouth he heard from Chiang that Li's offer to make peace was only a gambit to gain time.

Goodwin's devotion to China specifically, however, is comparatively recent. In 1941, Goodwin signed a letter as secretary of the New York Committee to Keep America Out of War in which he criticized China as anti-missionary and praised Japan "as quite friendly to mission aries." In the same letter he praised Franco as "a great liberator."

In October, 1941, less than six weeks before Pearl Harbor, in a letter to Senator Tom Connally published in the New York Journal-American, Goodwin said, in part, "Why should America destroy Hitler? Your draftees, like the Light Brigade, may be expected to dumbly 'do or die' but a board of directors, unless it is to grossly breach its trust, must 'reason why' . . . As between the two nations, we are the violators of international law, not Germany. Ours are the acts of piracy. Our neutrality patrol is one of gross unneutrality."

'With a Few Bucks'

Goodwin's lobbying efforts today reflect his previous experience.

To Goodwin, politics means a year-round fight, "always against communism," and a fight that he loves. He retired from the New York stock brokerage business in 1933 "with a few bucks" and entered Tammany politics.

He was Tammany leader in Queens for many years. He joined the Christian Front, which supported him in his unsuccessful attempt to run for Congress in 1936. In 1941 he split with Tammany, founded the American Rock Party in New York, and ran, again unsuccessfully, as its "dove of peace" candidate for Mayor of New York.

In 1944, Goodwin took a fling at national politics as treasurer of the anti-Roosevelt American Democratic National Committee. When this group was investigated, Foodwin was subpenaed and told a House Campaign Expenditures Subcommittee the Christian Front was "a very fine organization of which I have never been ashamed." He said to this committee, "I have no apologies for my good decent friends in the Christian Front or the Coughlin movement."

Goodwin entered big-time public relations in 1942 when he said he joined the staff of Robert R. Young, president of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, as a confidential advisor. He said he stayed with Young until 1946.

In his interviews, Goodwin talked confidently of big-time future plans. He says he is interested in the international promotion of a firm selling low-cost prefabricated houses.

He says he expects to be in Washington—after he gets China the money she wants to lobby for an increase in the price of gold, "to help the common man in his fight against communism."

Big 3 as 1 On Far East

herent anti-Communist force in China.

Republicans in the Senate have protested furiously against the State Department's decision to abandon Chiang. They fought unsuccessfully to get an unconditional arms grant of $75,000,000 for Chiang's Nationalists in the $31,314,010,000 program of military aid for free nations.

The aid bill now before the Senate calls for a 75-million-dollar China aid grant, but leaves its use to President Truman's discretion.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson, British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman sat in on yesterday's conference. Schuman was called in after Bevin and Acheson had gone over the Far Eastern policy field in two-party talks. That was taken to mean that the United States and Britain are taking an interest in the struggle now being waged against Communism in French Indo-China.

Also Covers Japan

Diplomatic sources said the general "accord" announced by the three Ministers also covered Japan. The three powers were said to have decided jointly to push for an early peace treaty with Japan, with or without Russia's assistance.

These informants said the Ministers also agreed that there is no basis right now for a Pacific pact along the lines of the North Atlantic Security Treaty but they will continue to espouse independent nationalistic movements in southeastern Asia as the best immediate antidote to communism.

As the meeting broke up, reporters asked Schuman how he feels about Indo-China. He replied that he was "optimistic."

VA to Put Curb On GI Training For 'Avocation'

By the United Press

Former GIs who want to study bartending or personality development with Uncle Sam footing the bill will have to get special permission from the Veterans' Administration in the future.

The VA said that from now on those veterans wanting to take a new course under the GI bill must demonstrate that the course "is not recreational or avocational, but is essential to their employment objective."

VA listed these courses as needing special approval:

Correspondence and part-time courses.

Dancing, photography, glider, bartending, personality development, entertainment.

Vocational courses offered by schools set up since the GI bill was enacted June 22, 1944.

Music, public speaking, sports and athletics, and flying courses that are not concerned with the student's present or future livelihood.

New Drug Is Quick Skin Disease Cure

Successful use of one of the newer antibiotic drugs, bacitracin, against highly contagious impetigo and other skin diseases has been reported from tests made here.

The findings, by Dr. Jack L. Derzavis of Georgetown University and Drs. J. Sidney Rice and Louis S. Leland of Walter Reed General Hospital are reported in the current Journal of the American Medical Association.

Bacitracin, they reported, was shown by their tests to be "a new and potent agent for the treatment of accessible pyodermas (pus-forming skin ailments)." Furthermore, they noted, it produces but few allergic reactions.

Bacitracin ointments, they reported, were particularly effective against impetigo, drying and curing such skin eruptions "within 48 hours of the initiation of therapy."

To determine human sensitivity to the drug, the doctors made patch tests of 150 adults by applying a small amount of the drug to the skin for 48 hours. All of the tests were negative for reaction to bacitracin.

A fortnight later, one third of the number were retested on the same site for another 48 hours. All test sites were normal after the patches were removed, they noted.

"The results seemed indicative of low allergenicity and were subsequently corroborated by the occurrence of only one case of dermatitis of the contact type (inflammation from contact with a substance) among 138 patients subsequently treated with bacitracin ointment," they reported.

The test results are considered medically significant since use of sulfa drugs and penicillin for skin diseases makes some patients hypersensitive to the drugs, which they may later need for severe infections, such as pneumonia.

The tests were made here at both Gallinger Hospital and Walter Reed General Hospital. Only five failures were noted in the series of 138 patients treated; another 5 showed some improvement with bacitracin treatment, and the remaining 128 were termed cured of their skin ailments.

It's Automatic

Clinitron Uncovers Diabetes

The American Diabetes Association will this week unveil its new weapon against diabetes, a speedy automatic machine for mass screening to uncover unknown diabetics.

Hewson

The machine, known as the Hewson Clinitron, will be publicly demonstrated for the first time at the Eastern States Exposition at Springfield, Mass., beginning Monday.

The Clinitron screens as many as 120 blood samples an hour, quickly sorting out the small percentage, perhaps 1 to 2 percent, with high blood sugar level and perhaps diabetes. An estimated one million persons in the United States unknowingly have the disease.

Indicates Individuals

Since an above normal level of blood sugar may be caused by many factors—ranging from the recent meal to a diseased liver—the tests merely indicate which individuals should seek out their physicians for more conclusive diagnosis.

Two models of the Clinitron will be exhibited, one a pilot model and the other an improved production version.

The chemical test used in the apparatus was developed by Dr. Hugh L. C. Wilkerson and Dr. E. Heftmann, both of U. S. Public Health Service. Initially, it was put up in small test kits for use by doctors as a 5-minute screening test for diabetes.

3-Minute Test

In operation, the Clinitron tests a few drops of blood from the finger of each individual. The blood samples are placed in test tubes which are inserted in the machine, and the careful chemical test proceeds automatically. The color of the test tube solution at the 3-minute end of the process determines whether the individual has a normal or a high blood sugar content.

Thomas Hewson of Lessells, Mass., the machine's inventor, will supervise the Clinitron operation at the exposition booth.

Home Care Is Planned

viding and supervising continued treatment in their own homes. More ideally, the enthusiastic medical chief stated, it could eliminate hospital care in many patients through diagnosis, treatment and supervision of follow-up care, all within the patient's home.

Both the public and the doctors, he admitted, must be educated to "this new role of the hospital in community life." The pendulum must swing back somewhat to the "once natural custom" that the aging sick were the responsibility of their families, and were cared for at home, he said.

"We just can't go on building hospitals forever," Dr. Fazekas declared.

He pointed out that Gallinger Hospital at present has 57 patients who have been hospitalized there for the past 308 days and hundreds of others who have been there 100 to 200 days. The hospital's readmission rates, he said, range today between 30 and 40 percent.

"We must end this evil of discharging patients without any following through on their continued treatment," he said.

At present, the 39-year-old physician said, Gallinger Hospital, with its more than 1400 beds, has the services of one public health nurse to follow up discharged patients, see that they are referred to the proper clinics for continued care, and transmit their medical case histories to the clinic physicians.

Admittedly only a part-time measure, the service does nothing for the discharged patient who can't or won't report to the clinics voluntarily.

Moreover, said Dr. Fazekas, it violates the time-honored medical concept that medical care once prescribed by a doctor should be followed by that doctor to the treatment's end.

Extension of hospital care to the patient's home, he said, would end much of this shuffling of patients from hospital to clinic physicians.

Home hospitalization for the city's indigent has long been advocated by Dr. George C. Ruhland, District Health Officer. Two years ago, Dr. Ruhland proposed follow-up care of patients discharged from Gallinger in their own homes by physicians on a contract fee basis of a suggested $2 a visit. Funds were never made available for the purpose, however.

Renewal of the fight for a home service plan is only part of the new program at Gallinger which has infused the medical staff since last May when Dr. Fazekas and Dr. Philip A. E. Stebbing, superintendent, were given command.

Since then, hospital staff members said, monthly meetings of the medical staff have been "pepped up" by invitation talks of the area's leading medical authorities, laboratory services for diagnosis have been put on a 24-hour-a-day basis, and concerted effort has been made to raise pay classifications for key workers.

More importantly for a teaching hospital, they said, more emphasis is now given to medical research, with projects under way or soon to be started including a one-shot, 1,200,000-unit penicillin treatment for syphilis; new studies of drugs to be used in combination with streptomycin against tuberculosis; cardiovascular research; investigations of effects of new drugs on infectious diseases, and special research on diseases of the liver.

Concerning the one-shot syphilis treatment, Dr. S. Ross Taggart, District Health Department venereal disease chief, said yesterday that some patients are already receiving it, though the majority are getting the more standardized five-day treatment at Gallinger's Rapid Treatment Center.

Dr. Sitterly Elected to Old Society

DR. CHARLOTTE M. SITTERLY

Dr. Charlotte Moore Sitterly, astrophysicist in the National Bureau of Standards, has been elected an Associate of the Royal Astronomical Society of Great Britain.

Announcement of her selection disclosed that she is the first and only woman chosen for the distinction, though the late Annie J. Cannon, of Harvard College Observatory, was an honorary member of the society.

The Royal Astronomical Society was founded in 1820 and is one of the world's oldest and most distinguished organizations in the field.

Dr. Sitterly, the announcement stated, was elected in recognition of her outstanding contributions in astronomy and astrophysics, particularly her extensive compilation of multiplet tables (for determining chemical composition and physical properties of stars) and her work in identifying lines in solar and sun spot spectra.

The woman scientist, who lives here at 3711 Brandywine st. nw., joined the Bureau of Standards in 1945 to work in its spectroscopy laboratory, analyzing atomic spectra, compiling data on atomic energy levels, identifying lines in the solar spectra and assembling multiplet tables. Previously, she was research associate at the Princeton University Observatory.

Streptomycin Is Diarrhea Corrective

Safe and effective use of streptomycin at Children's Hospital here to relieve infant diarrhea is reported in the current issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The report covered treatment results in 34 infants and children admitted to the special diarrhea ward of the hospital.

All had an uneventful recovery from the disease following oral administrations of the drug, though five of the number had either a relapse or reinfection within one month after discharge from the hospital, the report stated.

Reporting were the special research team of Drs. Sidney Ross, Frederic G. Burke, E. Clarence Rice, Harold Bischoff, and John A. Washington. Their clinical work is financed by a grant from United States Public Health Service.

The oral streptomycin treatment was for shigellosis, a major form of bacillary dysentery. The ailment has been noted in relatively higher incidence among military personnel, particularly in the tropical areas.

Twenty-five of the 34 patients were admitted to Children's Hospital in the acutely ill phase of the disease, it was noted. The remainder were classified as carriers in that they harbored the disease organism. Administration of streptomycin in the acutely ill broke the fever and reduced diarrhea within 12 to 24 hours, the medical team reported.

Blood Use Parley Set

Fifteen of the top medical specialists in the country will report on the most recent developments in the use of blood and blood derivatives at an all-day conference opening Sunday at 10 a.m. at the Statler Hotel.

The report will be made to members of the medical and technical staffs of the American Red Cross National Blood Program. About 150 staff members, from headquarters here and from 30 places throughout the country where regular blood programs exist, will attend. It is the first such meeting to be called.

The staff members will then attend a conference on the over-all blood program, to be held Monday through Wednesday at the Statler Hotel.

Sister Celeste Assumes Post Of Administrator at Hospital

The Sisters of Charity which conduct Providence Hospital, oldest hospital in the District, announced yesterday that Sister Celeste, director of the School of Nursing at Providence Hospital for the last year, has assumed her new duties as Administrator of the hospital.

Sister Celeste succeeds Sister Marie, administrator of Providence Hospital since April 1944, who has been appointed administrator of the Sisters of Charity Hospital at Buffalo, N. Y.

A third appointment announced yesterday was that of Sister Bernadette to be director of the School of Nursing at Providence Hospital. Sister Bernadette comes to Providence, where she was clinical instructor and supervisor in medical and surgical care from 1944 to 1947, from De Paul Hospital at Norfolk, Va., where she was director of the School of Nursing.

During her more than five years at Providence Hospital, Sister Marie had a leading part in formulating preliminary plans for the construction of a new Providence Hospital. The hospital is expected to be built on a 15-acre site recently purchased by the Sisters of Charity at 12th and Varnum streets ne. Sister Marie also was one of the founders of the Hospital Council of the Greater Capital Area in 1946, and served as its first secretary.

Sister Celeste was assigned to Providence Hospital last September, having previously been director of the School of Nursing at St. Mary's Hospital, Rochester, N. Y. In 1946-47 she was nurse consultant to the United States Public Health Service and spent some time in Central America.

At Sister Celeste's recommendation, an important change was made this month in the status of the School of Nursing at Providence Hospital, which has been affiliated with Catholic University since 1939. The unit has been elevated to the status of a regular school at the university. It is now designated as the undergraduate division, School of Nursing, Catholic University. Offering a four-year course leading to the degree of bachelor of science in nursing, the school has registered more than 100 students for the coming year.

Corn, Cotton Pests Wreak Crop Havoc

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Nature, by some unaccountable quirk, this year furnished unusually favorable weather for two of the American farmers' worst insect enemies, the corn borer and cotton boll weevil.

Losses from each, Government entomologists, or bug scientists, assert, will be the greatest in years. Some expect the cotton damage to be the worst since 1927. The damage from the corn borer will probably exceed, in dollars and cents, any previous year. It certainly will exceed any previous years in extent, 28 States now being virtually "completely infested."

The situation has already brought senatorial action. Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) has offered a resolution for an investigation of the European corn borer infestations, with an appropriation of $10,000. Hickenlooper's measure stated that the 1948 loss of 103 million dollars because of borer damage will be greatly exceeded, this year.

Weevil Study Asked

On Friday, Senator J. W. Fulbright (D., Ark.) asked the Agriculture Department to investigate the boll weevil. He reported some cotton farmers in his State will lose 50 per cent of their crop to the weevils. Heavy rains this year washed off the poisons used in sprays on the cotton plants, he said.

Entomologists are urging both cotton and corn farmers to take early steps to destroy as many of the insects as they can—the best autumn method being to chop up the stocks of the plants and plow them under before a frost. A frost causes hibernation of the bugs, and puts them beyond destruction.

No estimate of the extent of the losses to cotton and corn will be attempted until early next year. The losses from the inroads of the boll weevil will not be fully determined until after the crop is ginned. Many growers do not finish ginning until February and March, so the losses to cotton will not be known until April at the earliest.

Losses from the corn borer probably won't be fully determined until January or later, when corn picking in the affected areas is done.

Many experts declare that recent Government crop estimates fail to show the extent of late inroads of the insect pests.

Predictions Cut Monthly

Hickenlooper points out that although Iowa had almost perfect corn producing weather, the inroads by the pests have caused Government prognosticators to reduce their predicted yield every month since June.

On July 1, the Crop Reporting Board forecast a yield of 60 bushels an acre in Iowa, for a State total of 662 million bushels. On August 1, mostly as a result of borer damage, it reduced the forecast to 58 bushels an acre for a total of 640 million. Then, on September 1, it reduced the forecast to 56 bushels an acre for a total of 618 million bushels. Hickenlooper says his reports indicate that this last figure is still too optimistic.

In South Dakota, which this year is experiencing its first really bad attack, the situation is even more serious proportionately. On July 1, the official forecast for South Dakota corn was 33 bushels an acre for a total of 131 million bushels. This dropped in August to 27 bushels an acre for a harvest of 107 million; then this month to 22 bushels an acre for a total of 87 million bushels.

These figures would indicate a loss in the three months of 44 million bushels in each State. At $1.41, which is expected to be the average support price for the 1949 corn crop, this loss would reach the stupendous total of more than 62 million dollars for each State.

Brought to terms that can be understood better in the Washington area, that would mean a loss for each State about three times the total value of the entire Maryland tobacco crop.

Insecticides Improved

The growing strength of both pests is remarkable '. the face of improved insecticides and better methods of fighting such insects with improved farm machinery.

In 1923 and 1927, when the boll weevil was most serious, the Government had only on insecticide of proved worth in combating it, Robey W. Harned of the entomology department of the Agricultural Research Administration pointed out yesterday. Now there are several. Later ones are improvements in that they not only are death to the weevil, but also kill the cotton aphid, the tarnished plant bug, the cotton fleahopper, thrips, and other enemies.

Harned also pointed out that in both cotton and corn the development of hardier types, earlier maturing or more rapidly fruiting varieties has furnished man with better weapons. But still the bugs continue their destruction.

Tax Delinquen' Notices Mailed

Arlington residents who failed to file State and local tax returns before the May 1, 1949, deadline, are being notified by mail to file such returns, County Commissioner of Revenue Harry K. Green has announced.

Taxpayers who fail to hand in their delinquent returns within five days of notification will be served with summons, Green said. Penalty for failure to answer this summons is a fine of $20 to $100, plus court costs.

Exploding Bullets Put Hole in Wall

Part of the wall between the kitchen and bathroom in a third-floor apartment at 3171 18th st. nw. was blown out yesterday when a number of cartridges exploded during a fire cause by a short circuit in a wall outlet.

The occupants of the apartment, Mr. and Mrs. Elwood A. Sprouse, were attending the wedding of friends at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, several blocks away and heard the fire engines responding to the call, but had no idea it was in their apartment.

A short while later, Sprouse returned to the apartment to get a camera, while his wife went on to the reception for the bridal couple. He found firemen cleaning up the kitchen, where a four-foot-square section of the walls had been blown out and partially burned.

Sprouse said the cartridges were kept in a steel box, which in turn was stored in a footlocker kept under the sink. There also was several guns, including a Winchester rifle, in the locker. He said all of it was equipment he uses for deer hunting.

A veteran Army sergeant, who saw action in both Europe and the Pacific, Sprouse emphasized that none of the guns or ammunition were war souvenirs.

Stolen Car Report Trips Youth

An auto theft report that police said was filed by a District youth to cover a store break has led to solution of six recent housebreakings, Arlington police said yesterday.

Formally charged with the six entries and an additional count of making a false report was Richard A. Seldon, 19, 2423 Ontario rd. nw., who was seized when he strolled into police headquarters to report the auto theft, police said.

Detective Dudley Rector said Seldon first tried to report the auto theft at 1 a. m. Friday, but was told to come back after 8 a. m. By the time he returned, his auto had been recovered and police had received a report that a store had been entered only a short distance from where it was parked.

Linking the parked car to the store theft, detectives grilled Seldon until he not only admitted the theft, but confessed his guilt in five other housebreakings that have plagued police in recent weeks, Rector said.

According to Rector, Seldon said he decided to report his car stolen when, after breaking into the store, he returned to a parking lot and found the auto under the scrutiny of two uniformed policemen. Rector said the officers at that time were merely making a "routine investigation" at the parking lot.

Iowans Offer Price Cut, Gifts to Lure Home Buyers

Charles City, Iowa, Sept. 17 (AP). Housing shortage? They are offering new houses here with a new stove or refrigerator thrown in as inducement to buy. More than that, there was a $2000 price cut.

The stoves and refrigerators are the latest offers of this community's nonprofit home building corporation to get buyers for the last two of 23 houses it built. It has managed finally to get occupants—either renters or buyers—for the other 21.

It has been a long, slow process, says Mayor Harold S. Henry, president of the Charles City Development Co., Inc. Twenty-one houses are now occupied—nine by purchasers and 12 by renters.

Two remain vacant today although a housing shortage still exists here.

The home-building corporation was formed by 86 Charles City residents in this agricultural-industrial city of 10,000. Now, after three years, the city wants to get out of the business.

The houses, completed during the fall of 1948, were priced first at $10,500 and $11,200, without profit to the corporation. They are four-room frame, FHA-approved, two bedrooms with an additional unfinished upstairs room.

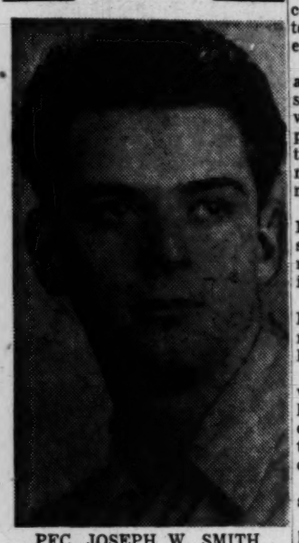
Maxey Convicted Of Beating Nurse

In Cowboy Boots

Texan in AF Taps Till, Hits Trail



PFC. JOSEPH W. SMITH
Over the hill

Authorities at Bolling Air Force Base yesterday were looking for Pfc. Joseph W. Smith of Texarkana, Tex. The sequence that led to the search began Friday night, as follows:

Pfc. Smith was assigned his first night duty as clerk in visiting officers' quarters, and his first time alone with the cash register.

At 3 a. m., Capt. Carwin C. Cirley entered the office to go to his room. There was no clerk, but there were two notes:

"In case you wonder, time AWOL, 0200. Destination, God only knows. Amount taken, $150."

"Call 4322. Ask for Corporal Bell. Clerk went AWOL."

Investigation yesterday showed that:

1. During the night, Private First Class Smith went to his barracks and changed from uniform into cowboy boots, blue pants and white shirt.

2. He was seen about 3 a. m., in a restaurant in Southeast Washington.

3. The total amount missing is $157.85, according to an audit.

The missing airman had been in service a year, most of it at Bolling Field. He is described as 19 years old; 5 feet 8 inches tall; stockily built; has dark curly hair, and his front teeth are wide apart.

And—there are the cowboy boots, fine for riding a horse, but uncomfortable for walking.

Columbia, S. C., Sept. 17 (U.P.).—A jury tonight found Prof. Russell B. Maxey guilty of pistol-whipping nurse Ann Pierce with intent to kill, and guilty of burglary, with recommendation of mercy.

Sentence was withheld until next week. It could be at least five years or up to 40 years.

Earlier, Maxey confessed he had tried once before to warm up a cooling love by sending nude photographs of a Knoxville, Tenn., coed to newspapers nine years ago.

Nurse Ann Pierce, who charged at his trial that Maxey beat her savagely August 3 when she likewise "gave him his walking papers," claims the professor tried to blackmail her in a similar manner with nude photographs he made of her on the beach.

Maxey was convicted of the Knokville charge of mailing obscene pictures and served eight months in a Federal Correctional institution.

He said he was certain that Miss Pierce returned his love until the night of August 3 when he let himself into her apartment.

After feeding the nurse's cat, which he said was the purpose of his visit, he testified he saw her coming and hid beneath the bed to keep from embarrassing her in case she had a companion.

She went to the telephone, he said, and told a man:

"Honey, I wish you were lying here beside me again, so I could reach over and touch your arm . . . Good night, Sweet."

Maxey said he came forth from his hiding place, they argued and then fought viciously until both were in a state of exhaustion.

Lonely Hearts Slaying Jury Sees Exhibits

Dover, Del., Sept. 17 (AP).—Blood-stained boards, a rope, false teeth and a rusty, 5-gallon drum allegedly used to cremate the body of Wade N. Wooldridge were among exhibits admitted today, over vehement defense objections, as evidence in the lonely hearts murder trial.

The court also heard part of the testimony of State Police Sergeant Joshua Bennett before recessing until 10 a.m. Monday. Bennett said today that one of the defendants, Robert Brennan, 15, confessed that he shot Wooldridge in the back of the head.

The State contends the boards from the Brennan barn are stained with Wooldridge's blood. The rope was used to haul the body from a grave in the Brennan pigpen, State witnesses have testified.

Brennan is charged with the murder of his mother's 67-year-old suitor. Mrs. Brennan is charged with being an accomplice.

Brunette's Strip-Tease Nabs Peeper

Associated Press WIREPHOTO
MRS. MARGARET JOFFA
Snared a Peeping Tom

Detroit, Sept. 17 (AP).—A shapely housewife today told police she threw modesty—and her clothes—to the winds to help trap a peeping Tom.

Mrs. Margaret Joffa, 34, said she put on a strip-tease when she suspected someone was peeking through the window.

While the peeper stood goggle-eyed, police sneaked up behind and grabbed him.

"I'm used to being a diplomat. I try to do the unexpected. That throws people off," said Mrs. Joffa, a former cigarette girl.

"Most people would have screamed. But I thought I'd confirm my suspicions. So I pulled off my slip and stood naked as the day I was born."

Then, the comely brunette related, she sauntered into an adjoining room and told her husband to call police. With that she strolled back and held the peeper's attention until police arrived.

They identified the peeper as Carl Hughes, 41. He was convicted by Recorder's Judge Paul E. Krause and scheduled for sentencing September 30.

Mummy in Strip-Tease Act for Scientists

New York, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—An archeological strip-tease is under way at the American Museum of Natural History.

A group of scientists eagerly are unwrapping an ancient Peruvian mummy they fondly call "Joe Blow." But it will be days before they find out for sure whether they are undressing a sack of beans or a bag of bones.

The peeling procedure began Thursday under the direction of Dr. Junius Bird, assistant curator of the museum. He and about a dozen other scientists from the United States and Peru removed layer after layer of cloth with the enthusiasm of children opening a present at a birthday party.

X-Ray Machines Too Small

The scientists hope Joe Blow will turn out to be the bones of a Peruvian high priest, who lived 1500 to 3000 years ago. They already have found a little feather in the swathings, indicating they might have the remains of a personage of high rank in the 500-pound, Schmoo-shaped bundle.

Joe is one of more than 100 mummies discovered in a burial ground at Paracas, near Lima, in 1927. It has taken the Peruvians since then to unwrap 75 of the mummies. Several turned out to be practical jokes. Ancient undertakers had bundled up bags of beans with as much handmade yardage as they usually accorded the priests.

That's why the scientists are afraid they might not find human remains in the mummy the Peruvians sent them. Bird said he didn't have a machine large enough to X-ray the mummy.

Bird, a specialist in wrappings, said the materials would give details on the amazing Peruvian civilization.

Every shred of the material—wool tapestry, plain cotton, painted cotton, wild desert fox and a green wool scarf—is saved. Bird went over each layer with a vacuum cleaner, and all the dirt was saved, too. The Peruvians have a law against exporting mummies, but they shipped this one here as a cultural exchange.

"We'll have to wrap it all up again," Bird said, "and send it back."

34,000 See Cup Regatta

Gravelly Points in more than 9000 autos. Despite the bumper-to-bumper flow, Capt. Mark Rasberry of the Park Police said his traffic problems were routine.

Most of the crowd preferred to take in the races standing, for free, leaving gaping empty spots in the mile-long bank of flag-lined grandstands.

The Potomac River, itself didn't bother to put on many frills for the gala event, although it did change its usual muddy hue to an opaque, seaweed green.

The river's reputation as a rough course for powerboat racing went undiminished. The water, chopped by a mild breeze, often lofted the growling boats out of their natural habitat into the air.

Streaking by the stands like porpoises and rasping like a buzz-saw in knotty wood, the pancake-like craft gave spectators the illusion they were speedier than the lumbering air transports settling lazily, on a parallel course, into National Airport across the river.

Reigning over the day's activities was Miss Jane Tunstal Lingo, Queen of the 1949 President's Cup Regatta. Exercising her regal prerogatives, Miss Lingo journeyed out to the committee boat to get an all-around view.

'It's Wonderfully'

She was convoyed to the boat by a covey of spruce young naval officers averaging 2½ stripes apiece. Announced Miss Lingo over a loudspeaker to her landlubber subjects: "It's wonderful."

Another distinguished visitor to the big Coast Guard boat, anchored in the middle of the river to judge the racing, was Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.). He was the guest of Jack Schaefer, a Detroit baking magnate who has entered two boats for the President's Cup, including last year's winner, Such Crust I.

President Truman, himself, cruising down the river in the USS Williamsburg over the weekend, is expected to return in time to watch the finals of the powerboat races this afternoon.

Mrs. Eric R. Greenleaf, wife of the general chairman of the regatta committee, suffered a mild heart attack as she sat watching the races in a Hains Point box. She was treated in a Red Cross tent by Dr. J. B. Gill, a friend of her family.

Another regatta casualty, the Red Cross reported, was 6-year-old Judy Steele of 501 N. Highland st., Arlington. Judy fell to ground from a pier on the Virginia side. Her injury was a "tee-inch splinter in the posterior." The Red Cross came to the rescue.

Boat Catches Fire

The motor of an 18-foot speedboat returning from the races caught fire at the entrance of the Corinthian Yacht Club, 1st and V sts. sw.

Percy O. Klein, 11 Grafton st., Chevy Chase, Md., who was operating the boat, ran it ashore and the fire was confined to the motor area. Harbor police, the fireboat and shore-based firemen responded.

Also aboard with Klein were Adam L. Fasick, 322 7th pl. se., and David A. Hart, 338 Jennifer st. nw. None was hurt and no estimate of damage was available immediately.

Heiress's Lifeguard Spouse Denies Tale

Miami, Fla., Sept. 17 (AP).—The $14-a-week lifeguard whose marriage to an heiress is on the rocks said today he wasn't the son of the Turkish delegate to the United Nations after all.

Orhan (Turk) Lambro declared that must have been his wife's idea. "Actually my father works for the Turkish delegation at the United Nations," he explained. He was born in the U. S.

The 23-year-old Lambro said his wife, Mrs. Aline Fresh Lambro, always insisted she didn't want her fourth husband—me—doing common work so I suppose she didn't want my father to be a working man either."

Noronic Fire Worst Disaster on Great Lakes Since 1874

247 Lost in Blaze On Lake Michigan Steamer That Year

By The Associated Press

Loss of up to 226 lives in yesterday's fire aboard the steamship Noronic in Toronto Harbor was the biggest death toll from fire on the Great Lakes in more than a century. In 1847, the steamship Phoenix burned in Lake Michigan with the loss of 247 lives.

A Canadian Press compilation of other major ship fires on the Great Lakes since 1823 follows:

June 16, 1823—Steamship Washington burned off Dunkirk, N. Y., Lake Erie, 30 dead.

August 9, 1841—Steamship Erie burned off Silver Creek, N. Y., Lake Erie, 175 dea'.

November 21, 1847—Steamship Phoenix burned in Lake Michigan, 247 dead.

June 18, 1850—Steamship Griffith burned in Lake Erie, 94 dead.

Among major peacetime maritime fires and explosions in the last half century were:

June 30, 1900—Fire at Hoboken, N. J., destroyed or damaged several steamships and piers with 145 lives lost.

June 15, 1904—Steamship General Slocum destroyed by flames in New York's East River with 1021 dead.

July 21, 1905—Boiler explosion on the U. S. gunboat Bennington at San Diego, Calif., took 65 lives.

January 21, 1906—Brazilian battleship Aquidaban sank near Rio de Janeiro when powder magazine exploded; 212 dead.

March 12, 1907—Explosion on French battleship Jena killed 117.

October 9, 1913—Steamship Voltorno wrecked by fire and explosion in midocean; 135 died.

August 18, 1925—Boiler explosion on excursion steamboat Mackinac on Narragansett Bay caused 47 fatalities.

May 16, 1932—French passenger motorship Georges Philippar burned and sank in Arabian Sea with 41 dead.

January 4, 1933—The new 41,000-ton French steamer L'Atlantique burned in the English Channel with 17 fatalities.

January 21, 1934—Chinese steamer Weitung burned and sank on Yangtse River with 216 dead.

September 8, 1934—American steamship Morro Castle, en route to New York from Havana, burned off Asbury Park, N. J., with loss of 134 lives.

January 31, 1948—A coastal steamer burned in Hongkong, China, harbor with 60 dead.

Major peacetime marine disasters from causes other than fire and explosion include:

April 15, 1912—The White Star Steamship Titanic sunk after colliding with an iceberg in the North Atlantic; 1517 dead.

May 29, 1914—The Canadian Pacific steamship Empress of Ireland went down after colliding with the Danish collier Storstad in the St. Lawrence River with the loss of 1024 lives.

June 24, 1915—The Eastland, a Lake Michigan excursion steamer, overturned in the Chicago River at the Clark Street bridge as lines were being cast off for a voyage to Michigan City, Ind. Of about 2500 picknickers aboard, 812 were drowned or crushed to death. The Eastland later was raised and remodeled by the Navy into a Naval training gunboat, the U. S. S. Wilmette.

Extinguishers and Hoses Failed, Survivors Say

Toronto, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Survivors of the Noronic fire said today that some of the ship's fire extinguishers and horses failed to work.

Don Church of Silver Lake, Ohio, said he believed "there was negligence on somebody's part."

Church said that when he grabbed a fire hose and tried to turn it into a blazing cabin, no water came out of it.

"I don't know why," he said. "Maybe it was burned somewhere along the line."

Another survivor, who would not identify himself, said when he tried to use an extinguisher he found there was no fluid in it.

Survivors reported there had been heavy drinking among passengers before the fire broke out.

All 325 Saved in 1945 When Sister Ship Sank

By The Associated Press

A striking parallel to the end of the Noronic was the fate of her sister ship, the Hamonic, which went down in flames four years ago at Point Edward, near Sarnia, Ont.

Unlike the Noronic, destroyed by fire at Toronto (Ont.) early this morning, all 325 of the passengers and crewmen aboard the Hamonic were saved.

"A miraculous combination of circumstances" was credited by an investigating board with saving those on the Hamonic.

Passengers aboard the vessel idly watched a small fire in the dock's freight sheds as the vessel docked at Point Edward July 17, 1945.

A sudden gust of wind sent a shower of sparks onto the ship's superstructure—and the Hamonic was ablaze.

Wind Fans Flames

Capt. H. L. Beaton ordered the mooring cables chopped and backed his ship into the St. Clair River channel. There, as the fire swept across the decks of the Hamonic, passengers began leaping the 50 feet to the water.

At this point, Captain Beaton ordered full speed ahead and steered for the shore. The Hamonic crashed into the bank. Her prow was buried 20 feet and the vessel held fast.

By then, the fire had reached amidships and escape from the stern was impossible.

Those on the prow faced a desperate choice. To jump meant serious injuries. To remain meant certain death.

It was then that a dockman, Elmer Kleinsmith, raced to the controls of a giant dock crane and moved its boom over the ship.

11 Crewmen Burned Badly

Seven times he scooped up loads of humanity. When he had finished, more than 100 persons had been carried to safety.

Astern, scores of other passengers were trapped. They began sliding down ropes and jumping into the water. Crewmen, who remained behind and were burned seriously, helped passengers to safety aboard small crafts from Sarnia and Port Huron, Mich., which waited to pick them from the water.

Five days later, when the vessel had cooled sufficiently to be searched, officials found only debris. All lives were saved.

Noronic Passengers Rode at Own Risk

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17 (U.P.). Officials of the Canadian Steamship Company said today that passengers aboard the Noronic rode at their own risk, but the company was responsible for the safety of their luggage.

St. Laurent Horrified By Noronic Deaths

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent said today he was "horrified" at the loss of life in the fire aboard the steamer Noronic, and in the name of his government he extended "deep sympathy to the families who have been bereaved."

"All our people," St. Laurent said, "will regret greatly that a friendly visit should have ended so tragically for so many of our neighbors from the United States."

HOW TO SELECT A DANCING SCHOOL

Anyone can operate a dance studio. No examination, no license is required. Even a person who knows nothing about dancing—or teaching—can hang out his shingle and profess to teach dancing "a new way." So be careful—ask these questions:

1. Who is the actual owner of the school? What experience does he have in teaching dancing?
2. Will you learn simple steps that you can do on a crowded floor?
3. Will you learn the fundamentals of good dancing—or waste your money learning novelty routines?

Arthur Murray's teaching methods are those developed through his 35 years' experience. Only socially correct steps are taught. Your dancing will look expert and smooth wherever you go.

207 Dead and Missing, 383 Injured in Fire Wrecking Great Lakes Steamer at Her Dock to bed I'm afraid many of them wouldn't smell the smoke or hear any shouts of 'fire,'" declared Sam Grahman, a crewman.

Many of the survivors escaped dressed only in nightclothes. Some jumped to the nearby dock or into the water without any clothes on at all.

"People were screaming and jumping without thinking," Dock Watchman Alfred Peterson reported. "Bodies were falling all around me on the dock and soon the screams were mingled with the moans of the injured."

Mass Funerals Likely

Toronto officials said mass funerals would probably be necessary for many of the victims. They were so badly burned identification was impossible.

It was the worst Great Lakes ship fire disaster in more than a century

C. S. L. President Marshall said the fire started in a stateroom on C deck, the highest deck on the ship. He believed one of the passengers had left either a lighted cigar or a cigarette in a cabin, walked out and forgotten about it.

The disaster was not caused by any negligence of crew members, he asserted, and the ship was "well equipped with every modern fire-fighting device."

"Certainly none of the officers or the crew knew of the fire until it become uncontrollable."

Mayor McCallum said it was "definite" the crew attempted to fight the fire before calling the city fire department.

Water Pressure Low

Only a few lifeboats and life preservers were used. Passengers said fire extinguishers failed to work and water pressure was so low that fire hoses were useless.

It took firemen eight hours to extinguish the flames. Hours later shoes were floating on the water, along with playing cards and several empty life preservers. Clothing and suitcases that had been flung overboard in panic were being slapped against the Noronic by wind-swept water. Vessels dragging the bottom for bodies, brought up only empty liquor bottles, clothes and luggage.

Most of the passengers were Americans who boarded ship at Cleveland and Detroit.

At least five separate explosions were heard as the flames engulfed the Noronic. Until 3:15 a. m. the fire appeared to be confined to the lower decks C and D but by 4 o'clock it had swept upward and downward and was belching flame from the portholes. Suspended above as if in a blast furnace, the metal life boats remained hung from the davits. When the fire was out they still hung there, buckled in the middle.

May Have Ignored Alarm

Why so many were trapped on the ship was a mystery to Canadian steamship officials tonight but witnesses said that it may have been because many persons had ignored the fire alarm. They ignored it because they felt it was another prank resulting from the "wild parties" that had taken place on the Noronic since it left Cleveland on Thursday. When they discovered the flames and smoke, it was too late.

Hundreds of persons were asleep and it is possible that they did not hear the alarm.

Tonight in Toronto there was a scene of hysteria. Telephone lines, local and long distance, were jammed by passengers who escaped and who were trying to inform their relatives and friends of their safety. Hundreds jammed outside an improvised morgue in the Horticulture Building in an attempt to identify their loved ones.

Toronto police have begun an investigation of the survivors' stories of drinking parties to determine whether criminal charges of negligence may be made against any passenger or crew members.

Three separate inquiries are being conducted—by the Dominion Department of Transport, the Toronto fire marshal's department and the chief coroner, Dr. Smilie Lawson.

Crew members reported that many of their comrades had left the ship for the night, leaving only a skeleton force aboard to fight the fire and help passengers to escape.

Many passengers accused the ship's officers of negligence and denounced the fact that there had been no fire drill on the Noronic.

Unofficial Account

Although reports were conflicting here is an unofficial account of the disaster:

Many of the passengers who had not dined on board immediately went ashore after docking at 7 p. m. Others gathered for a dance in the ballroom off the main salon.

The dance ended about 2 a. m. and persons either retired or gathered in staterooms for "parties." About 2:30 o'clock the fire alarm sounded. Passengers said the fire seemed to start near a closet next to a stateroom where a "party" was in progress.

Crewmen were observed to be fighting the blaze with extinguishers but within 30 minutes the fire began to spread wildly and a frenzied dash to escape started among the passengers, by this time the harbor fireboat and Toronto city firemen responded. Equipment was rolled out on Pier 9 and hoses played their streams into the flames.

Vessel Ordered Away

Meantime, the S. S. Kingston which had been tied up to the Noronic on its port side—the side away from the dock—was ordered to move away from the burning vessel and steam to safety in Toronto harbor. As she did this, dozens of persons were seen attempting to crowd onto gangplanks which had been placed between the two ships.

After the Kingston pulled away, the fireboat began pouring streams of water directly into the burning vessel, by this time afire only in the C and D decks. Passengers jammed the forward part of ship and began scrambling down ropes, jumping overboard or onto the platform of the dock, about 12 feet below the deck.

Hope Abandoned

At 3:15 o'clock the ship was aflame from stem to stern. Firemen then had given up hope for anyone who might still be on the ship. They loosened lines holding the Noronic to the pier, allowing her to ease out from the dock.

Stunned passengers who had escaped stood on the dock fighting the efforts of police to remove them to safety. They mumbled incoherently that they had to get back to save someone. Other passengers, still swimming away from the ship, called to rescue boats for aid.

Every available firemen, policeman, doctor, nurse and rescue worker was rushed to the pier. Priests and ministers comforted hysterical survivors. Volunteers served coffee and sandwiches.

Eighteen fire engines and two fireboats were rushed to the scene at the foot of Bay st., but it was five hours before the flames were sufficiently quenched for a search for survivors to begin. In the smoke and steam the firemen began with blow torches, shovels and pike-poles the task of finding the victims and bringing them out.

Burned and broken bodies were wrapped in tarpaulins and carried out.

Corner Lawson established a temporary morgue in the Horticultural Building of the Canadian National Exhibition 4 miles away. Bodies piled up under the glass-domed roof of the building, where prize flowers were on exhibit a week ago.

Crew members said the ship's master, Capt. William Taylor of Sarnia, Ontario, a. first manned a hose, and then raced along the ship, smashing in doors and windows to awaken the passengers.

He leaped over the bow as flames closed in on him.

A heap of human ash was in the middle of the floor of the morgue, waiting to be sifted for identifying jewelry and other belongings.

Planes, cars and special trains from Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit brought relatives to the morgue where they filed up and down the rows of corpses. Many bodies were burned beyond recognition. Papers, wallets and personal effects taken from the charred bodies were shown to the grief-stricken searchers.

from the top deck," Metcal said. "Some of the people who jumped landed on the dock far below. Others landed in the water. The police and firemen did a marvelous job, using boats to rescue the people who leaped into the water."

Sees Flaming Bodies Plunge

Mrs. Mat J. Hackman of Covington, Ky., told of the terror and panic and of seeing flaming bodies plunging into the water.

Mrs. Hackman said:

"I woke up about 2 a. m. and the room was all ablaze, and smoke was everywhere. I screamed to my husband to wake up . . .

"The heat was terrible, and the people were screaming all about us. We got outside on the deck . . . and jumped overboard into the water.

"I could see people still jumping into the water, and some of them were on fire . . .

"It's a miracle anybody was saved, for everyone got panicky, and some people tried to get back to their cabins to get their luggage.

"We didn't try to save a thing. We lost everything, our luggage, our clothing, all identification. I have only my nightgown, and my husband only his pajamas."

Both Mrs. Hackman and her husband were hospitalized, but it was indicated they were out of danger.

Suspected Practical Joke

Emil Dahlke, of Hazel Park, Mich., said he thought at first people were joking when they woke him up and said the ship was afire.

"I was asleep in my cabin with my wife when someone started pounding on the walls and door. There had been many drinking parties during the night and I thought it was a practical joke. Then I heard the awful word 'fire' ringing down the alleyways. It sent a chill through me.

"I flung open our cabin door and was met by a blast of heat and flame. I ran back into our cabin for my wife and for a few moments we just stood there. I could see the horror on her face.

"There was no time to dress. We ran to the stateroom window and pushed out the screen. A deckhand grabbed our shoulders and pulled us through the small porthole.

"Hundreds were rushing around the ship screaming and crying out for their relatives and friends. It was complete panic, and women were knocked down in the struggle. All I could think of was getting my wife from the inferno. We ran to the side of the ship and slid down a hawser with my wife on my shoulders.

"Others were jumping in panic into the water, although some couldn't swim. Someone tossed us a life preserver and we were hauled from the water. It was horrible. We were still dazed as we were pushed into a taxi and rushed to St. Michael's Hospital."

There were tales of heroism, too, from crew members. Chick Yates, a Canadian steward, was one of the first crew members to notice the fire.

Suicide to Go Forward

"We got them all off in our section," Yates said. "We stayed as long as we could, but it was suicide to go forward to see if there were any passengers there.

"I got up for a drink of water about 2 a. m. and heard someone shout 'fire' as I walked down the passageway.

"The passengers suddenly grew hysterical. But somebody shouted 'the fire's under control' and that quieted them down for a while. Then they crushed through the passageways, shouting and crying as they went.

"I found the captain (William Taylor) and we both started through the cabins. We checked the stewards' quarters, the engine room and the cabins. Everybody was out. On the way back it was really bad.

"Sparks were flying and the smoke was thick. I tripped over a woman who was lying across the passageway. The captain and I carried her to the side of the ship. We tied a rope around her and lowered her into a launch. People were jumping over the side.

"Then we took one last look. We couldn't do any more. The ship was ablaze to the superstructure."

Gasperi Returns

Rome, Sept. 17 (U.P.) — Premier Alcide de Gasperi cut short his vacation today and returned to Rome to intervene personally if necessary in the eight-day-old Italian maritime strike.

Hospitals List Survivors in Ship Tragedy

TORONTO, Sept. 17 (AP).—Clad in night clothes, survivors of the fire-swept steamship Noronic crowded city hospitals this morning.

The fact that many fled the ship without belongings or street clothes made identification of the injured difficult.

Terrifying Night Fire Panics Lake Ship's Passengers in Mad Scramble...

Saved—An unidentified man and woman who escaped without clothing, descend from the burning S. S. Noronic on a fire ladder. They are covered with blankets

Captain of Noronic Smashed Cabin Doors And Hauled Women Onto Safety of Deck

Toronto, Sept. 17 (AP).—Huddled in hospital corridors and the lobby of a downtown hotel, burned and hysterical passengers of the Noronic told today of a night of horror and heroism in which they were hauled or scrambled from the burning ship.

For a half hour after flames enveloped his ship, Capt. William Taylor still was standing in the bows, throwing ropes to passengers clambering over the side. As he was being taken ashore on a fireman's ladder, the ladder broke and he fell into the icy bay and had to be pulled out.

Passengers said that before the captain left the ship he smashed in cabin doors, hauling women out on deck.

Lucille Roberts of Detroit said she saw a man on an upper deck surrounded by flames.

"Then He Disappeared"

"As I watched, the flames licked around him and you could hear him scream the last time. Then h disappeared."

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Orth of Detroit huddled in a waiting room scanning stretchers as they were brought ashore.

Mrs. Orth rushed suddenly to the door.

"Here's one of them," she shouted. On the stretcher was her sister, Irene. After Irene was put in an ambulance Mrs. Orth waited, watching for her sister-in-law, Mrs. Lucille Orth.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Stover of Sombra, near Sarnia, Ont., said they were wakened by the shouting.

"We went hand-over-hand along a hawser from the ship to the shore," Mrs. Stover said.

Some passengers were dazed as they came ashore.

Mrs. Jennie Bell of Cleveland, asked for a nickel to call Florida 8980. Told there was no such telephone exchange in Toronto, she said: "Toronto? Isn't this Cleveland? How did I get here?"

"Jumping Without Thinking"

In a hotel lobby, Mrs. Bailey of Kalamazoo, Mich., sobbed for her husband.

"I don't know where he is. The last I heard from him he called to me from the upper bunk of our stateroom. I don't know what happened to Joel. I'm afraid he didn't get out of the room. I wish I knew."

Alfred Peterson, a watchman, said the fire was "a lot worse" than the blaze that destroyed the Noronic's sister ship, Hamonic, at Point Edward near Sarnia July 17, 1945. Peterson was a survivor of the Hamonic fire.

"People were screaming and jumping without thinking," he said. "Bodies were falling all around me on the deck and soon the screams were mingled with the moans of the injured."

Special Officer D. P. R. Brown of Port Arthur was at the captain's side during most of the fire.

Still Holds Cards in Hand

"One woman became hysterical and put her first through the door," he said. "When we got to her she was a mass of blood, but we freed her."

A man in a torn blue shirt stood at the dockside moaning, "Oh, no, no, no." As police took him away from the water's edge, he fought and shouted: "I've got seven people on that ship."

Jack Feingold, of Cleveland, said he ran from his cabin screaming. As he stood safe on the dock minutes later he realized he still held a gin rummy hand.

Mrs. Flora B. Meads of Louisville, Ky., said: "When it was all over I stopped a minute to thank God for my safety—more because I have two old ladies to take care of in Louisville."

In a hotel lobby Mrs. John Garfletter of Cleveland watched two hours for her husband. When he came she hugged him and cried: "I prayed God every minute that you were safe.

"We've lost all our money and the jewelry is in my case on the ship. But that doesn't matter."

Charred Bodies in Foot-Deep Ship Debris Present Ghastly Picture to First Reporter

By Edwin Feeney
Toronto Star Reporter

Toronto, Sept. 17 (AP).—I was the first newspaperman allowed aboard the flame-swept hull of the Noronic. It was a horrible picture of charred remains amid foot-deep embers and melted glass. I saw the blackened bits that were once people. There was a young woman clutching her baby. The remains crumpled when picked up by firemen.

There wasn't a wooden partition standing. There was no wooden furniture or upholstery unburned. No stairways remained save one at the bow of the ship. Every pane of glass had been melted by the intense heat.

Fire Chief Art Smith said his men found victims in every position.

"Many had their lives snuffed out without waking. One young woman, wrapped in a blanket, had her face burned, but her body was not touched. Upper bunks fell crashing down on victims below. Firemen searching the ruins found human remains between scorched mattresses.

Priests from St. Michael's Cathedral, Father Vincent Foy and Father Bernard Kyte, stepped about the debris, sometimes almost knee deep.

The steel stanchions were bent in every shape. The decks crumpled and buckled from the heat, made progress hazardous for the firemen seeking the dead.

"Never in my fire-fighting days have I seen anything so ghastly—so tragic as this," Chief Smith said.

The ship's dining-room presented a weird sight. All the wooden seats were completely burned, leaving rows of metal fastenings to the floor—sticking upright, scores of them.

Amidst the odor of charred wood inside the burned-out hull was the sickly smell of burned bodies. What first appeared to be embers of furniture at times were the bones and blackened flesh of victims.

Firemen were using pitchforks to unscramble debris and human remains alike. Many of the victims had been carefree and happy, dancing in the ship's ballroom shortly before the fire.

I saw what I believed were husband and wife in each other's arms.

"We found dozens of couples who went to death in a last embrace," said Chief Smith.

All wooden floors were burned down to the steel decks. Even porcelain wash basins were broken to pieces. Enamel on the bathtubs was melted off.

The greatest hole appeared to be on A deck. There the younger set of the ship's passengers frolicked while their elders slept in their beds. The flames which raced along the starboard side, which lies against the dock, trapped the frantic passengers between the deck and open water on the port side.

Three Investigations Ordered in Ship Fire

Toronto, Sept. 17 (AP).—Three separate investigations will be made into today's disaster aboard the passenger steamer Noronic in Toronto Harbor.

In Ottawa, the transport department ordered Capt. W. N. Morrison of Toronto, the department's supervising examiner of masters and mates, to start a preliminary investigation.

A second investigation, to be held under Capt. Sam Hill of Toronto, was ordered by the Toronto fire marshal's department.

The third inquiry will be an inquest into the deaths of the first 71 bodies recovered from the Noronic. This investigation will be conducted by Chief Coroner Smirle Lawson.

Another Noronic Made Tragic Headline in '93

In February, 1893, according to the World Almanac, a White Star steamer vanished during its maiden voyage from Liverpool, England, to New York.

The Almanac does not say how many persons were lost with the ill-fated ship.

Its name? The Noronic.

Pitcher of Water 'Wasn't Much Use'

Toronto, Sept. 17 (AP).—A pitcher of water wasn't much use against the flames that swept the S. S. Noronic today, says Matt Hackman of Covington, Ky.

From his hospital bed, Hackman related: "I wasn't excited. There was a pitcher of water in the cabin and I used it to fight the fire. But it wasn't much use."

Court Voids Virginia Taxi Pickup Bar At Airport

Cab-Calling Duty Isn't Delegable to Employe of Rival Service, Judge Says

A rule prohibiting Virginia cab drivers from picking up fares at Washington National Airport except on call of the dispatcher of a competing firm was voided yesterday by Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan in Alexandria.

Since 1945, Airport Transport, Inc., has held near-exclusive rights to taxi service from the airport under an agreement with the Government.

The regulation on which Judge Bryan ruled was issued by the Civil Aeronautics Administrator in 1947 when stands were provided for other Virginia-licensed cabs.

These rules prohibited drivers from picking up passengers except on call of Airport Transport's dispatcher. They also provided that drivers must park in eight designated spaces about 150 yards from the terminal building, and forbade them from cruising or loitering near the terminal building.

Last April, Andrew Kirk, jr., an Arlington cab driver, was arrested for picking up a fare without waiting for the dispatcher's call.

Kirk contested the validity of the regulation on the ground that District drivers are not subject to it. A reciprocal agreement between Virginia and the District exempts Washington cabbies. The refusal of CAA to accord him the same privilege, Kirk contended, was "unreasonable and arbitrary."

Judge Bryan agreed by acquitting Kirk and ruling that the regulation "cannot be upheld" because "the regulation of taxicabs must remain in the hands of the Administrator or a representative . . . having no interest in taxicab service at the airport."

The duty of calling cabs cannot be delegated to the employe of a competing service, Judge Bryan ruled, "especially when the principal duties of that employe are to procure passengers for the taxicabs of his employer, the rival of other cabs."

At the same time, Judge Bryan convicted another Arlington cab driver, Andrew J. Koerner, of violating the regulation forbidding cruising or loitering. There was no question, the judge said, of this rule's validity. Sentencing of Koerner was deferred to an undetermined date.

Talks of 'Killing'

Policeman Ordered to Stand Trial

Details of how a police private allegedly threatened to "kill" during a drinking bout in his home were disclosed yesterday by Captain Loraine T. Johnson, head of the Traffic Division.

Johnson said the policeman, Pvt. Harry C. Lee, 32, who is attached to the Traffic Division, will go before a police trial board.

According to Johnson, at about midnight Thursday night Lee telephoned Sergt. Joseph Osterman from his home and announced, "If you don't take me to a hospital I'm going to kill somebody."

Osterman could tell from the way Lee spoke that he had been drinking, Johnson said, so he contacted the two night police inspectors, Lieuts. Albert Embrey and Lafone Starkweather.

Osterman accompanied the night inspectors to Lee's home, at 209 10th st. ne., where Lee was placed under suspension and arrested and charged with being drunk. Johnson said Lee was locked up at the Ninth Precinct until 6 a. m. Friday at which time he was released and forfeited $10 collateral on the drunk charge.

According to Johnson, Lee was on sick leave at the time of the incident.

Last February 26, Lee pleaded guilty to charges of neglect and willful disobedience of orders and was fined $75 by a police trial board.

Home Accidents Kill 3 Persons, Injure 116

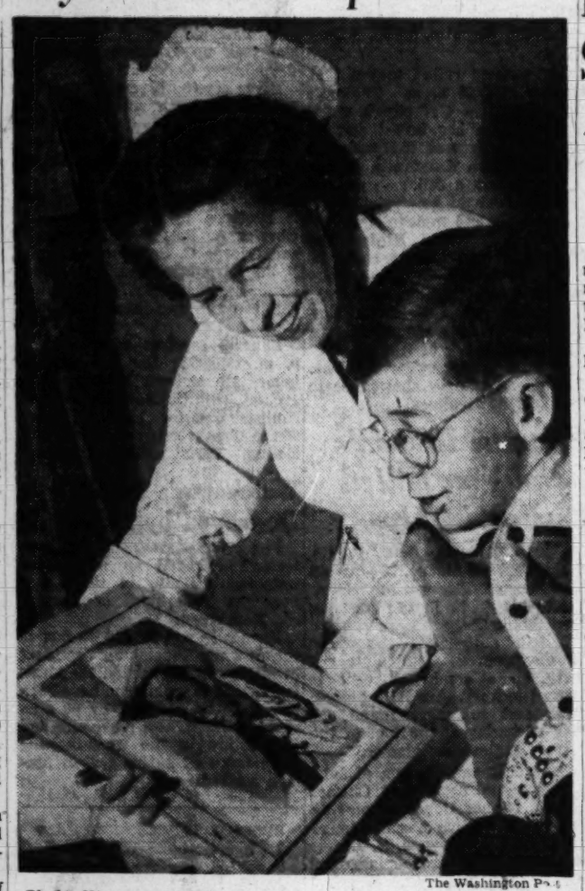
Three persons were killed in home accidents last week, two by falls and the third by burns, the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service reported yesterday.

Home accidents resulted in injuries to 116 persons, who were treated at local hospitals. Among them were a 2-year-old boy, who swallowed a piece of stick, a 10-month-old baby, who swallowed an open safety pin, a 3-year-old girl who gulped down a nickel and a young woman who swallowed a small key.

A 4-year-old boy fell from a tree, cutting his abdomen on a limb, while a 63-year-old man mashed the fingers of his left hand in a washing machine wringer.

The new figures brought the total of fatal home accidents to 169 so far this year, as compared to 182 this date last year. Injuries have reached 4463 to date as compared to 4436 this time last year.

'I've Talked to Roy Rogers . . .' Boy Smiles on Hospital Bed



The Washington Post

Clyde Higgason and his nurse, Mrs. Ruby Dillon, look at Roy Rogers' picture in Doctor's Hospital

Dressed up in a Roy Rogers cowboy suit, with a half-dozen pictures of his Hollywood hero scattered over his hospital bed, 13-year-old Clyde Higgason last night was probably the happiest youngster in Washington.

"Gee," he told the nurses that dropped in and out of his room. "I've talked to Roy Rogers—in person—all the way from Hollywood, too. Really, I have."

Then, with all the enthusiasm a boy, ill with diabetes since he was 4, could muster, he would add: "Roy asked how I was . . . said he would write me . . . maybe come around to see me, if he gets around where I am."

Arranged by Fellow Patient

The phone call from Cowboy Rogers, which came at 12:42 p.m. yesterday as a complete surprise to Clyde, was arranged by a fellow patient at Doctors Hospital, who had become impressed by the youngster's devotion to the movie hero.

Rogers talked to him for almost 25 minutes, asking questions about him and telling him about Rogers' motion picture plans, and then Dale Evans, the movie hero's wife, took over for a few minutes' conversation.

"It was probably the brightest moment in his life," his mother, Mrs. C. L. Higgason of Caton, Miss., said last night. "I never saw him so happy.

At home, in Caton, she explained, he has a trunk full of Roy Rogers' books and pictures, three Roy Rogers cowboy suits, and almost uncountable Roy Rogers toys. In the hospital here, he has been sleeping in Roy Rogers pajamas.

"He has been a Roy Rogers fan since he was 6," the mother said.

Underwent Operation

He was taken to Doctors Hospital two weeks ago from Caton for a surgical operation necessitated by his diabetes, plus kidney complications. Now recuperating from the operation, doctors last night expressed hope his condition may be somewhat improved.

Both doctors and the friends he has made at the hospital here hope so—for, they point out, Clyde at 13 already has had more than a lifetime of illness.

He has spent nearly three fourths of his life in bed, in hospitals and under a doctor's care. Not only has he suffered diabetes since he was 4, but he has been stricken 11 times with bronchial pneumonia and at the age of 10 was struck by an automobile, suffering a broken leg.

What is his ambition when he grows up and gets well—if he does?

"I'm going to be a cowboy," he said last night. "One just like Roy Rogers—and I'm going to live in Hollywood."

Street Work Near End at Hutchins Pl.

Spirits of residents living on block long Hutchins pl. nw. were on the upswing yesterday.

Highway Department officials have informed the seven homeowners on the deadend street that the messy job of cutting their roadway through to Potomac ave. nw., will be completed in a very few weeks.

Hutchins pl. residents have complained that the highway department work has turned Hutchins Pl. into a sea of red mud all summer.

In some instances, according to the home owners, sewer and gas connections were severed by the bulldozers.

L. M. Hedgecock, a deputy engineer of streets, said yesterday that the grading is all finished and surfacing will be on in a very short time.

He explained that the job which caused so much inconvenience to the neighborhood was difficult because of unusual drainage conditions. The street runs south off MacArthur blvd.

Gets $200

Nervous Bandit Robs Pharmacy

A nervous bandit who thrust his hand in his coat and told employes "I've got you covered," yesterday robbed the Bradley Pharmacy, 701 Maryland ave. ne., of the day's receipts—about $200.

Daris M. Osbourn, 35, of 655 Maryalnd ave. ne., the manager, told police the bandit waited until a customer left and then walked toward the cash register. Holding his hand inside his coat as if he had a gun, he ordered Osbourn to empty the cash register.

Osbourn put the receipts on the counter. Then William A. Spangler, 29, a clerk, picked up the money and handed it to the bandit.

Spangler, who lives at 1710 28th pl. se., said he told the bandit: "Go ahead—we aren't going to move."

The man was described as a Negro, from 30 to 35 years old, 5 feet 10 inches, 160 pounds. He wore a brown hat and a brown double breasted suit, police said.

Institute Aims at Rating Like CPA's for Secretaries

In a few years you will employ, not a secretary, but a CPS.

A CPS, in this case, is a Certified Professional Secretary.

Mrs. Louise Brooke, 4465 St. Barnabas rd. se., chairman of the National CPS Institute, disclosed the institute's plans here yesterday.

She spoke at the Southeastern Regional Meeting of the National Secretaries Association, held at the New Colonial Hotel, 1156 15th st. nw.

"We hope to make a CPS in the secretarial field the equivalent to a CPA in accounting," she said. "And we hope also to elevate the secretarial field to a professional level in the public eye."

Rigid Examinations

Rigid examinations on secretarial techniques, office procedures and practices and business administration will be required, she added, before a secretary can become a CPS.

The examinations probably will be two or three days long, and eventually, she declared, "we hope to get legal status for Certified Professional Secretaries, such as that now held by accountants."

The CPS Institute, set up last February by the National Secretaries Association to study professional standards, expects to offer the first examinations next spring, she said.

75 Attend Regional Meeting

About 75 secretaries from the District, Maryland and West Virginia are attending the regional meeting, which will end with brunch this morning.

A secretary, according to the association's concept, is not simply a stenographer who takes and transcribes dictation, but one who can take over and run the office when the boss goes on a fishing trip.

Miss Lee Swift of Baltimore, office manager of the District Office of Paulsen-Webber Cordage Corp., was elected regional inter-chapter council chairman at yesterday afternoon's session. A banquet was held last night.

Sales Tax Deadline Set Tuesday

District Merchants Must File First Month's Collections From Levy Then

District merchants were reminded last night that Tuesday midnight is the deadline for filing the first month's sales tax collections.

The new levy went into effect last August 1.

But with returns submitted by only 2500 of an estimated 15 thousand merchants collecting the tax at close of business Friday, Allan F. Brooke, Sales Tax Administrator, disclosed last night that he has already given 200 vendors until the end of September to file their collections at the District Building.

Brook explained that about 20 of the 200 merchants asking for more time are the large department stores. They have requested a delay to straighten out their bookkeeping and accounting procedures for handling the new retail levy.

He said his division thus far has received only $200,000 in sales tax collections.

District officials have estimated that the new levy should account for at least $1,125,000 each month.

District Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler is hopeful returns will run higher than the estimated figure.

He plans to postpone marking up the city budget for next year until after October 20 in order that he will have two months' experience with the new levy and hence have a more clear picture of any additional revenue the city may expect.

City agency heads already have drafted a record-high budget estimate for the coming year—close to 150 million dollars, it has been reported. It is expected to be made public the first of next week.

Court Halts Lusk Homes Foreclosure

The Fairfax County Circuit Court yesterday granted an injunction to hold up foreclosure on two Woodlawn Manor homes whose builder has been arrested on a charge of larceny by embezzlement.

The court order prevented the auction sale yesterday by the First National Bank of Alexandria of two properties on which the builder, Veterans Housing Corp., had borrowed money. The order also prohibited the bank from foreclosing on any other Woodlawn Manor properties for which it is trustee until further order from the court. The injunction is effective until October 27 unless modified before them.

Three Are Plaintiffs

Plaintiffs in the injunction action against the bank were Channing L. Pace of 3100 S. Hill st., Arlington; and George M. Gohn, jr., and Gustav G. Lindstrom, both of Woodlawn Manor. Gohn and Lindstrom occupy, but do not own, the houses on which the bank intended to foreclose. They had not settled with the corporation, they said, because the houses had not been completed according to specifications.

Pace claimed he paid the corporation $3000 two years ago for a house which he hasn't yet received. Both Gohn and Lindstrom said they had invested about $3000 each in deposits on the lots and for improvements made necessary by the corporation's failure to comply with its contract.

Pace swore out a warrant Friday for the arrest of Richard S. Lusk, head of the corporation, on a charge of larceny by embezzlement. A preliminary hearing has been set for September 21 at Fairfax Trial Justice Court.

In Effort to Recover

The injunction petition stated the corporation borrowed a total of $25,000 on Lindstrom's and Gohn's lots under a deed of trust. They asked for the injunction so they could try to recover some of their investments from bankruptcy proceedings which they started against the corporation last week in Alexandria Federal Court.

Woodlawn Manor is a tract of more than 300 acres situated between Mount Vernon and Route 1. The corporation started developing it about three years ago. About two dozen or more brick houses have been built. More than half are occupied.

The injunction petition states the corporation has accepted deposits on homes totaling $87,000. Residents there said yesterday that no substantial construction work has been undertaken in the past year.

Lusk, a former Army major, lives in one of the homes. He was not home yesterday when a reporter sought comment on the court actions started against him and the corporation.

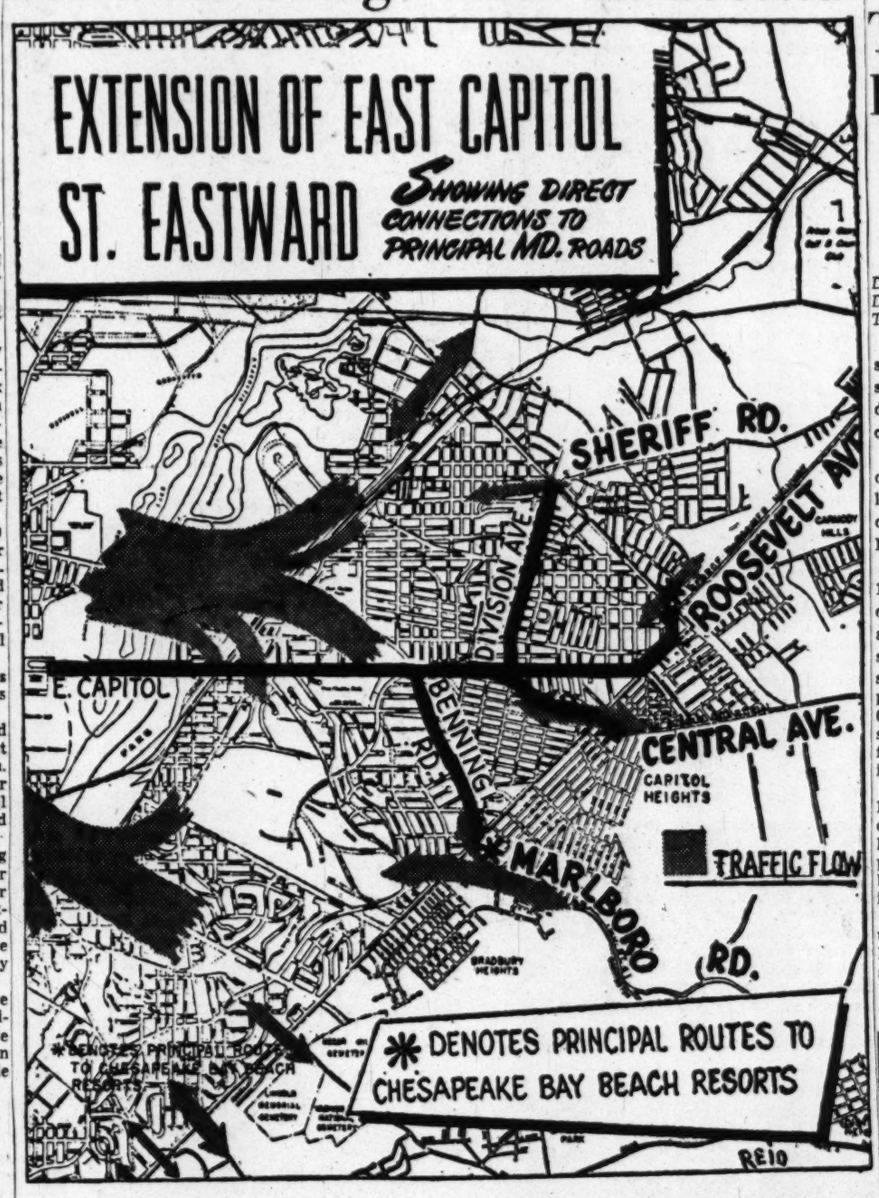
City Engineers Back Capitol St. For New Bridge Over Anacostia



By Thomas Winship

Post Reporter

Supported by voluminous traffic studies projected to the year 1980, the District Highway Department yesterday urged immediate construction of a bridge over the Anacostia River at East Capitol st.

In recommending East Capitol st. as the bridge site to help serve an expected 139 percent population increase in the mushrooming Anacostia area over the next 20 years the city engineers find themselves in direct opposition to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

For the past 10 years, NCPPC has been stumping for a new Anacostia bridge in line with Massachusetts ave.

Traffic Snarl Described

Traffic snarls at the three bridges now spanning the Anacostia cause motorists an aggregate waiting time of 1,320,000 hours a year, the Highway Department study revealed

The case for the East Capitol Street Bridge site—released "as a big surprise" to NCPPC officials and without their prior approval—will top the agenda of NCPPC's monthly meeting Wednesday.

John Nolen, jr., NCPPC planning director, said last night he "did not want to be in the position of criticizing the Highway Department's findings, but we will want to thoroughly study sources of their statistics before reaching a decision."

The Highway Department's "A Study of the Anacostia River Bridges" also concluded that still another new relief span must be constructed between the existing Anacostia and Sousa Bridges sometime between 1958 and 1961. It stressed that a site should be selected and preliminary planning started without delay.

But it is "imperative" the East Capitol st. span be under way not later than January 1, 1951, the Commissioners were told in the report prepared for them.

The new bridge, visualized as a six-lane structure and estimated to cost between 6 and 12 million dollars, will connect with principal roadways leading to Chesapeake Bay resorts.

Leading into the District, the East Capitol st. span would cross Kingman Island and Anacostia Park. Its District side approach would cross just north of the National Guard Armory.

Heading toward Maryland, motorists would have feeder routes into Sheriff rd., George N. Palmer Highway, the proposed Washington-Baltimore Parkway, Benning rd., and Maryland Route 4 to Marlboro.

Justification for selecting the East Capital st. site and rejecting NCPPC's Massachusetts ave. proposal is based on data from the recently completed Washington Metropolitan Area Transportation Study, highway engineers emphasized.

Chief Reasons Given

The Highway Department study listed these chief reasons why the new bridge should be in line with East Capitol st.:

1. With completion of the South Capitol st. span this December, there will be three bridges serving the Anacostia area south of Fort Dupont and only one—Benning Road Bridge—feeding traffic into the area north of the park.

A new bridge at Massachusetts ave. simply would mean adding a fourth span to the south of the Dupont Park area, whereas the East Capitol st. site would provide another bridge to help take the load off the Benning span and thus better balance access into the two areas.

If the new bridge is located at East Capitol st., highway planners see the eventual need by 1980 of only three new Anacostia bridges—East Capitol st., the proposed Washington-Baltimore Parkway span, and one between 11th st. and Pennsylvania ave.

But if Massachusetts ave. is selected as the next crossing, there still would be a definite need for the East Capitol span as well as the others, or a total of four new bridges, the District officials contend.

2. An East Capitol st. bridge would skirt Gallinger Hospital, whereas any District approach leading to a Massachusetts ave. span would cut through the municipal hospital.

Commissioner Guy Mason has voiced strong objections to the idea of a roadway dissecting the hospital grounds.

3. It would afford an access route from the east via the "longest and most impressive avenue leading directly to the heart of the Nation's Capital"—on East Capitol st.

NCPPC's Arguments Listed

In the face of these arguments, NCPPC has favored building the next new Anacostia bridge at Massachusetts ave. because it would (1) connect with the important Maryland roadways needing "capping," (2) lie midway between the existing Pennsylvania ave. and Benning bridges, and (3) would not cut through the long-projected sports area in Anacostia Park at the foot of East Capitol st.

The study of the transriver traffic flow in the Anacostia River Valley analyses population trends, vehicular registration and traffic volume and patterns in the area east of the river.

The area selected for study is bounded roughly by the Anacostia River on the west, east into Maryland by Camp Springs road, Fort Foote road on the south and Landover Hills on the north.

Highlighting the pressing need for more bridges across the Anacostia in the next few years, the Highway Department estimates the area's population will jump from the present 152,600 to 364,800 by 1980—or 139 percent.

"Glaring Deficiency"

But the most "glaring deficiency" emerging from an examination of existing conditions, said the Highway Department report, is the absence of adequate lane capacity over the Anacostia.

In 1948, an actual count showed that during a 24-hour weekday 125,350 vehicles wanted to cross present bridges, or a load of 8356 cars a lane.

By 1980 the experts expect the total traffic flow over the Anacostia to reach 289,300 vehicles, an increase of 131 percent.

The Highway Department study was prepared in cooperation with the Bureau of Public Roads and at the request of Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young, who is on leave in Europe.

New Movement Bats 1000 in Finding Work For Oldsters and Gets Offer of 7 Acres of Land

A movement, started here a week ago to put older persons to work, has so far placed all applicants, and is beginning to attract Nation-wide interest, its originator reported yesterday. The group also has an offer of 7 acres of land.

Otis J. Bouma, 70, of 1907 G st. nw., whose advertisement in a Washington newspaper began it all, said he hardly has had a minute to himself since the idea caught fire.

This morning, Bouma will travel out on the Defense Highway, about 15 miles from Washington, to look over a 7-acre plot which an elderly couple has offered to contribute to the movement.

"The folks who own it say the land has poultry-raising facilities on it and we can possibly put men to work doing that, but they'll let us do anything we want with the land," Bouma said. He already has consulted a contractor about building there.

Meanwhile, Bouma's brain-child is batting 1000 in putting men to work. The three men who applied last week, usually considered too old to work, have been placed in jobs.

The first, Bouma says, was a 70-year-old man who was "looking for employment at $25 a week." He left a note at Bouma's house stating his qualifications, which included an A.B. degree from Texas University, an M.A. from the University of Wisconsin and a Ph.D. from American University.

"A few hours later," Bouma relates, "a man in the health-food business came over looking for someone to hire. I brought them together and the applicant is now demonstrating health foods and getting commissions on the orders he takes."

The other two men were placed by Joseph Haidacher, an accountant who lives at 1404 Longfellow st. nw. Haidacher is the chairman of the organization's employment committee.

Bouma already has received about 60 letters, many from outside Washington and all wishing the movement well.

Surprsingly, he says, most of the letters are not from people who want jobs. Most of the correspondents have suggestions to offer or want to help in some way. One man, from Smyrna, Del., who suggested putting older men to work in youth-counseling projects, wants to keep Informed on the progress of the movement and enclosed a $1 check to cover postage.

Having already appeared on the radio, Bouma has been invited to present his ideas on television. He's scheduled to appear on Les Sands' "Game Room" show over television station WTTG at 7:15 p. m. Tuesday.

The organization, still unnamed, will hold its next meeting at 7:30 p. m. Wednesday in Pierce Hall, 16th and Harvard sts. nw.

Alumnae Meets Friday

Fall meeting of the Washington chapter of the East Carolina Teachers College Alumni Association will be held at 7 p. m. Friday at Evans Coffee Shop, 4770 Lee hgwy, Arlington. Dr. John D. Messick, president of the college, is slated to speak.

Boy, 3, Killed As He Runs To Play With His Brother

Youngster Dies Under Wheels Of Automobile in Front of Home

District traffic deaths this year . . . 42
Deaths this date last year 49
Total traffic deaths 1948 67

A 3-year-old boy was killed instantly yesterday when he was struck by an automobile as he darted across the street to join his older brother.

He was Kenneth S. Baylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence L. Baylor of 3527 Warder st. nw. Both of his parents are teachers at Browne Junior High School.

The accident occurred about 10:20 a. m. almost directly in front of the Baylor home. The boy had asked his mother if he could visit some friends in a house on the same side of the street. He apparently saw his brother Lawrence, 6, playing on the other side of the street, however, and ran out in front of his father's parked auto into the street.

The driver of the auto, George L. Lanham, 66, retired machinist of 426 Allison st. nw., who was headed north on Warder st., told police he did not see the child before striking him and had no idea where he came from.

The child's body was crushed under the wheels of the car and he was pronounced dead at the scene. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of accidental death.

During Recess

Autoist Jailed As Speeder in School Zones

A motorist was sentenced to 30 days in jail after a 20-block chase at speeds up to 65 miles and hour through two school zones during the noon recess Friday.

He is Theodore Tyler, 30, a laborer, of 2602 Bowen rd. se. The auto Tyler drove has defective brakes and he is a chronic traffic offender, according to Judge Milton S. Kronheim, jr., of Municipal Court.

"If you ever come before me again on charges like these, you can kiss your family goodby for a long time," said the judge. "I'm letting you off easy this time."

Policeman Off Duty

The arrest was made by Eleventh Precinct Private P. J. Gallahan, who was off duty and in civilian clothes at the time.

Gallahan said he had just driven his two children back to the Stanton School when, at 12:50 p. m., he was narrowly missed by a fast-moving auto.

He gave chase from 25th st. and Alabama ave. se., through the 15-mile limit zones near the Garfield and Turner schools and apprehended Tyler in the 3300 block of 5th st. se.

"The last time I looked at my speedometer, the needle was hitting 65," Gallahan said. "Traffic was so heavy I didn't look at that needle any more."

The officer testified Tyler tried to elude him twice on the way to the 11th Precinct station house for booking. When they arrived there, Gallahan said he discovered the brakes on Tyler's automobile worked only when pumped several times.

Convicted on Six Charges

Tyler was convicted on charges of exceeding the 25-mile-an-hour speed limit, two charges of exceeding the 15-mile speed limit, driving on the wrong side of the street, failing to give a hand signal and having defective brakes.

After finding Tyler guilty, Judge Kronheim said:

"Your previous record of speed and other traffic offenses shows you are an unsafe driver. I don't think you could learn merely by being fined or lectured for this serious offense.

"Suppose some little child were crossing the street as you went through the school zones. You would be bound to hit him. And this is all aggravated by the fact that your offense occurred during the recess hour."

Court Continues Hit-Run Case

Two traffic charges against Robert E. Hodges, 40, were continued yesterday in Municipal Court until Monday. Hodges was charged by police with leaving the scene of an accident and failing to halt at a stop sign.

The continuance was granted after the Government said Max Mann, 1209 N st. nw., who was injured in the crash, was in the hospital. The charges resulted from an auto-motorcycle collision at 12th and M sts. nw, Friday night.

Louis Hertle Dies; Owned Gunston Hall

Louis Hertle, one-time Chicago department store executive, who spent the last years of his life in the restoration of historic Gunston Hall, died there yesterday at the age of 89.

Mr. Hertle, who had deeded the historic estate to The State of Virginia in 1932, had reserved a life tenancy for himself there. With his death, the property will be turned over to a board of regents for administration.

Mr. Hertle had been a Virginia resident since about 1913. He spent a year in restoration of the colonial mansion before he occupied it after its purchase in 1912. It had been ravaged by squatters and other tenants between the Civil War and the turn of the century. The Georgian mansion was built by George Mason between 1755 and 1758.

He and Mrs. Hertle did as much as possible to preserve not only the architectural simplicity of the 555-acre estate, but also to restore the colonial aura which had once surrounded it.

They were frequent hosts to Presidents Woodrow Wilson and Calvin Coolidge. Mr. Coolidge, friends remembered, would retire after dinner to the Gunston Hall library while Mrs. Coolidge and "the boys" bould be entertained by Mrs. Hertle.

Mrs. Hertle, his second wife, died in 1929. Three years later, Mr. Hertle presented the mansion to the State of Virginia as a memorial to George Mason.

Under terms of the deed, the estate will be managed and supervised by a Board of Regents of Gunston Hall, one of whom shall be president of the Society of the Colonial Dames of America in the State of Virginia. Others are to be appointed by the Governor of Virginia upon nomination by the CDA.

Mr. Hertle was born on February 22, 1860, in Cincinnati, Ohio. Early in life he joined the Chicago firm of Marshall Field & Co., where he was employed in an executive capacity until his retirement in 1912.

His first wife died in 1912 and two years later Mr. Hertle married Eleanor Daughaday of St. Louis.

In 1917, members of the British War Mission in the United States held frequent conferences at Gunston, as, later, did those who attended the Limited Arms Conference in 1922.

Mr. and Mrs. Hertle soon after the war revived a custom of Colonial times of having boatmen, costumed in Colonial ruffles and silks, carry Gunston visitors across the Potomac by barge from Washington or Alexandria.

Later they also held an annual Christmas tree for the children of the manor, presenting them with one "useful" and one "joy" toy.

In 1924, Mr. Hertle served as a member of the board of trustees of George Washington University. In 1925 he travelled extensively abroad in his search for authentic period furnishings for his home.

When Mr. Hertle bought Gunston Hall in 1912, nothing remained of the original gardens except the English box hedges, which now line a center path in the Gunston gardens. Mr. Hertle designed formal gardens which now flank the box. In addition, he was able to restore intricate carvings and mouldings in the house itself, which had been depleted by the years. The house, considered one of the gems of Georgian architecture of the Colonial period, was built by George Mason between 1755 and 1758. It was designed by William Buckland, who also designed the Hammond-Harwood house in Annapolis.

Mason, author of the Declaration of Rights which became the basis of the Bill of Rights by Thomas Jefferson, was a noted leader of the American Revolution and a close friend of George Washington. It is believed that Washington himself stepped off the distances between Mount Vernon and Pohick Church and Gunston Hall to make them equal.

Funeral services for Hertle will be held at 4 p. m. Monday at Pohick Church. Burial will be in Rose Hill Cemetery, Chicago, Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. Hertle is survived by a niece, Mrs. Freda H. Holbrook, of Des Moines, Iowa, and a nephew, Robert G. Winckler, 8602 Milford ave., Silver Spring, Md.

Constitution Anniversary Is Observed

This country's strength stems from the fact that every citizen is free to develop his life "without fear of elemental interference," Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, president of George Washington University, said last night.

"The government of and by the people must be for the people. This is the theme of our Government under the Constitution," he said.

Thus keynoted were ceremonies commemorating the 162d anniversary of the signing of the Constitution. Sponsored by the District chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, they were held in the auditorium of the Smithsonian Institution's natural history building.

Dr. Marvin told some 200 persons that understanding of the United States' political and social order is the answer to persons who would trade the democratic theory of distributive justice for the lesser socialistic expediencies.

"There is not one of us," he declared, "but who feels that there ought to be changes in our interpretations of governmental forms with the passing of time."

But, he added, in such changes American citizens do not want to lose government by law, the rights of the individual, or any of the freedoms of our democratic way of life guaranteed by the Constitution.

"We must be jealous of our constitutional political system and militant in the teaching of the great principles and possibilities of our system," he concluded.

The National Guard of Honor of the American Legion participated in the ceremonies. Music was furnished by the Navy Band Orchestra.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Farm Picture Doesn't Look Healthy

The farmer is still a highly prosperous citizen. But not as prosperous as he was. In 1947 the farm operator made more money than in any year in history. His gross income from farm marketings and Government payments approached 35 billion dollars. After expenses, his net income was $17,800,000,000. That was 8.8% of the national income.

Livingston

In 1948 the postwar tide turned. True, gross farm income was 4% higher, thanks to bumper crops. But prices the farmer received for his wheat, cotton, hogs, and other products started down. At the same time, his operating expenses, such as labor costs and the price of automobiles, fencing wire, baling cord, oil, fertilizer—the things he buys—moved up. The farmer was beginning to lose his wartime advantage over industrial workers, whose wage in steel and automobile plants and automobile plants and coal mines kept on rising. Net income of farm operators in '48, at $17,400,000,000, dropped to 7.7 per cent of the national total.

For '49 More of the Same

Another drop is in the offing. Crops are slightly smaller than in '48. For instance, the wheat harvest will be off noticeably from last year. And sensitive farm commodity prices are just about at their postwar lows—off 28% from the peak. Here's the price story for five key farm products:

Product	Recent Price	Postwar High	Date of High	% Decline
Corn (bu.)	$ 1.35	$ 2.81	1/15/48	52%
Cotton (lb.)	0.30	0.39	7/16/47	23
Hogs (100 lbs.)	22.00	31.20	8/19/48	29
Steers (cwt.)	29.25	36.75	7/13/48	20
Wheat (bu.)	2.14	3.12	11/28/47	31

So far this year, receipts from farm marketing are off about 10%. But farm expenses, in common with industrial expenses, have not come down as fast as receipts. Net income for the year will run to about $15,300,000,000—if it gets that high. That would be a drop of 12% from last year, and would amount to 6.9% of the national income.

A More Stable Citizen

Agriculture is getting just about the same share of the national income as in the 20s, and considerably more than during the depression '30s. The farmer, by any standard, can hardly be said to be doing badly. What's more, he's a much more stable citizen than in either the '10s, the '20s, or the '30s. He's not subject to the violent ups and downs in prices and in income.

The main reason is Government support of agricultural prices. In February 1948 and again in February of this year, serious price breaks took place in the grain markets. But unlike in the depressions of 1937-38, or 1929-33, or in 1920-21, no panic started. The Government stepped in, stemmed the decline. Laissez faire was not permitted to go berserk.

Today many farm commodities are selling at or near their support levels. That, in itself, is hardly healthy. It means that the market, ex-Uncle Sam, would go down. It means, as Government officials realize, that all is not hunky-dory. Secretary of Agriculture Brannan recently told Democratic farm leaders that by the end of 1949 the Government may have more than 100 million dollars of eggs in its stockpile, with no market outlet in sight. He asked Congress to be relieved of the mandate to continue to buy eggs at levels which induce overproduction.

Obviously, the Department of Agriculture and Congress must reexamine the entire farm support structure. Farmers, themselves, must distrust any program which results in ever-mounting surpluses. Some way, therefore, will have to be found to cut down United States production to probable consumption or to increase exports. Only that will make support prices realistic and reliable.

No Toboggan Yet This Time

The declines in agricultural prices since the January 1948 peak are a step toward price readjustment. In this war, farm prices went up much more sharply than industrial prices. Naturally, they would come down more. In the first World War farm and industrial prices went up together and, subsequently, to the distress of farmers, industrialists, and workers, they came down together. The contrast between the two periods is shown in the following table:

Prices	World War I	World War II
	% Change from Low
Farm	+150%	+222%
Industrial	+170	+ 92
	% Change from High*
Farm	— 53%	— 18%
Industrial	— 44	— 5

*To date.

Perhaps the best way to tell the story of the postwar price readjustment is with statistics: In October 1946, the farm price parity ratio reached a high of 133. That means that prices farmers got for products they sold were 33% better than prices of goods they bought—in relation to the pre-World War I period of 1909-14. But now the parity ratio is down to 101. So, if 1909-1914 was a normal period, then farm prices and industrial prices are normal relative to each other.

'Boom Ahead' In Furniture

Chicago, Sept. 17 (AP).—The retail furniture business has started to boom again, Gen. Lawrence H. Whiting, president of the American Furniture Mart, said today.

Whiting, who has surveyed the home goods industry in several sections of the country, gave this view of conditions:

Many merchants who didn't buy sufficiently at the summer market, are having difficulty on refills. Some furniture factories are booked up through October and November.

One factory announced an 8 per cent price increase last week. Another plant that was working only three or four days a week earlier this year has stopped taking orders on the bulk of its line. Another reported it was sold up until the winter market in January.

Territories where this condition exists, Whiting said, including New England, North Carolina, Virginia and Arkansas—all leading producers of bedroom and dining room furniture.

Units sales—although not dollar volume—may approach the all time high of 1948, Whiting said. He said prices, now 12 to 15 per cent lower than a year ago, will account for the differential.

Capital Buys 3 Planes On Pay-as-You-Go Plan

Capital Airlines yesterday took the first step in a "pay as you go" equipment program when it contracted with the Douglas Aircraft Corp. for the purchase of three new Douglas Super DC-3 airplanes, according to President J. H. Carmichael.

The new aircraft will seat 31 passengers and will have a cruising speed of 253 miles per hour with a top speed of 270 miles per hour. Compared with the standard DC-3, the new model has 550 more takeoff horsepower, cruises 64 miles an hour faster and has over 2000 pounds greater capacity payload.

Stocks Strong On Hopes for Labor Peace

By William D. Horgan

New York, Sept. 17 (AP).—The stock market took a bright view this week of the chances for industrial peace.

A surge of optimism sent prices bounding upward early in the week to within shaving distance of a 1949 peak. Optimism persisted later despite mounting tension between labor and management in the steel and soft coal industries.

At the close of trading Friday the market seemed to have little basis for taking anything but a bleak view of the strike outlook in steel and coal. On Friday, nevertheless, when differences between labor and management had widened to the breaking point, the market managed to turn in a modest gain.

Rail Shares Improve

An interesting angle to Friday's trading was the fact that railway shares did better than most other groups. A coal strike, though, would chop deeply into the earnings of some of the Nation's big carrier systems.

The net result of the week's business in stocks was an addition of around a billion dollars to the market value of all shares listed on the exchange.

A wide variety of issues sold at the year's best prices. The general price level was only a shade under the 1949 high.

The volume of trading topped one million shares every day in the week and turnover for the five days was the largest for any week of the year.

In the domestic background a series of reports indicated that business, generally speaking, ranged from good to excellent. A fall upturn, which could be seasonal in all or in part, was shaping up and competent observers expected the country's economic health to bloom for a while at least.

Paradoxical Moves

Wall Street has a reputation for refusing to be worried about strike threats and this week added a little polish to its reputation.

More than once in the past the market has tumbled, not when a serious strike is in progress—but when the strike was settled.

Final prices and changes from a week ago of selected stocks follow: U. S. Steel, up 75 cents at $23.37; Bethlehem Steel, up $1.37 at $28.25; Sunshine Mining, up $2.12 at $12; Sinclair Oil, up 37 cents at $24; Du Pont, up $1 at $52.75; Standard Gas & Electric $4 pfd., up $4.87 at $36; Radio Corp., up 62 cents at $12.12; United Gas Corp., up $1 at $17.87; General Motors, up 37 cents at $63.12; U. Cheaper Cars Find Demand

Detroit, Sept. 17 (AP).—New car sales are bearing up unexpectedly well for this time of year but there has been a shift to lower-priced models.

Dealers are finding more sales resistance to the luxurious cars which once sold with ease. By contrast, there appear to be ready buyers for all cheaper models.

Buick is putting its sales push behind the new Special series. A less-chromed model at the bottom of the Buick price line. Studebaker reportedly has found a better reception for its Champion Series than the more expensive Ambassador.

Chevrolet now accounts for 52 percent of General Motors production, 2 percent above what it was a year ago and 4 percent higher than 1947, according to Automotive Digest.

A Chevrolet spokesman said their cars are selling "as fast as we can get them on the lot." Ford reported that dealers still are asking for as many Fords as they can get.

Chrysler Corp. said it intends to keep its present production schedules for the next three months. Plymouths are accounting for more of the Chrysler total.

Dealer stocks of cars have been increasing slowly until they now are at their highest point since the war. This is interpreted to mean a drop in demand, but it isn't anything to worry the industry. Prewar new car stocks still were much higher than they are today.

Middletown, Conn., Sept. 17 (AP). The Goodyear Rubber Co., footwear manufacturers, announced today its 700 employes would go on a five-day week Monday. Since February, they have been working four days a week.

Albert A. Lappin, president and treasurer of the concern, said there had been no especial increase in orders to warrant the change but that he had "every confidence" that business would improve sufficiently to absorb increased production.

CALVES

Lane Proposes Plan to Stop Fisheries War

A new peace proposal in the Maryland-Virginia oyster and crab fisheries war has been made by Gov. William Preston Lane of Maryland, it was disclosed yesterday.

In letters to Gov. William M. Tuck and to John S. Battle, gubernatorial nominee, of Virginia, Lane proposed that at the coming Virginia legislative session, the Old Dominion join in the Maryland plan for a joint control commission for interstate waters.

He further proposed that the States join in asking the Chesapeake panel of the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission to work out details. This could be done, if both States ask it, beginning at a meeting of the panel late this month, Gov. Lane wrote.

Refers to Crab War

In his letters, he referred particularly to the crab war, which earlier this summer cost the life of one Maryland crabber, Earl Nelson of Crisfield. He was shot by a Virginia conservation officer when, it was alleged he operated in Virginia waters. This has been disputed.

"Mr. David H. Wallace, chairman of the Maryland Fisheries Commission, has proposed publicly, with my approval," Governor Lane wrote, "that our States permit crab scrapers and potters to operate on either side of the boundary within limits to be worked out between us.

"This proposal is made in recognition of the fact that the blue crab in its migrations moves freely back and forth between our two States without respect for man-made laws."

Governor Lane made no mention in his letters of the sticky problem of oyster dredge laws. Virginia not only permits, but also licenses, these mechanical oyster-harvesting devices. Maryland, which has most of the oyster beds in the Potomac and Chesapeake Bay, forbids them by law.

However, he urged that Virginia concur at its next legislative session in the Maryland proposal for the two-State control commission. That was authorized by the Maryland Legislature at its session last year, but awaits similar approval by Virginia.

Next year, for the first time, legislatures of both States will be in session simultaneously. Thus controversial points could be ironed out without extensive delay for meeting of one of the other body, observers pointed out.

Were such a commission appointed, it would have authority to settle finally the question of dredgers or no dredges, oystering by daylight or dark, areas where crab and other commercial fishermen could operate, and all other questions in dispute.

The letters to Gov. Tuck and Battle were written and mailed at Annapolis, Friday. No response has been forthcoming yet.

World War I Buddies Get Together . . .

The Washington Post

REUNION—Well-known Marylanders revive old memories at the reunion yesterday of members of K Company, 115th Infantry of World War I. They are (from left) Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., Senator Millard Tydings, Col. E. Brooke Lee and Gen. F. P. Watson. The latter was a colonel of the 115th during the first World War.

Weigle Picked St. John's Head

during a controversy described then as "differences of opinion on administrative problems."

Three other officials, including former Dean Raymond Wilburn, resigned their posts at the same time, but retained positions on the faculty.

Dr. Weigle said he would adhere "to the type of program" in effect at St. John's, a four-year course based on the reading of more than 100 "great books" of ancient and modern times.

"Don't ask me how many of the great books I have read," he said last night.

"I like the idea of a standardized curriculum for all students," he said. "As an undergraduate I was a little at sea and wish someone had taken me in hand and exposed me to the great thinkers of the past."

A native of Northfield, Minn., Dr. Weigle was graduated from Yale in 1931. Later, he taught for a year at Yale-in-China, Hunan Province.

Returning to this country, he completed graduate work at Yale, winning a doctor of philosophy degree in the field of diplomatic history.

From 1940 to 1943 he taught Far Eastern history at Carleton College, Northfield, before receiving a lieutenancy in the Air Forces. He served as liaison officer with the rank of captain in the China-Burma-India theater before entering the State Department as document officer of the Far Eastern Commission in 1945. He was later promoted to executive officer in the office of Far Eastern Affairs.

Dr. Weigle lives with his wife, the former Miss Mary Grace Day of Northfield, and two daughters, at 6306 Maple ave., Chevy Chase, Md.

Veterans at Annual Reunion Refight World War I Battles

Men and women with graying hair, some with grandchildren as well as sons and daughters accompanying them, yesterday afternoon refought the Battle of the Argonne and other World War I campaigns in France.

They were members, 30-odd years ago, of Co. K, 115th Infantry Regiment of the 29th Division, who held their annual reunion at Jesup Blair park, Silver Spring, and members of the families of Co. K soldiers.

They came principally from the Silver Spring area, but some appeared from other parts of Maryland and other States.

As an indication of the 30-year transition since their fight for the United States, a number of veterans of World War I addressed them.

Included were Gov. William Preston Lane aand Senator Millard Tydings of Maryland, Gen. Milton A. Reckford, USA ret., wartime commander of the 115th, and E. Brooke Lee, who was commander of Co. K in the first global fight.

Senator Tydings, now chairman of the Senate Armed Forces committee, urged the 1000 listeners to use their influence in Congress to see that the United States is adequately prepared at all times. Never again, he said, will the United States have the luxury of time to prepare for a war before it is involved.

Joseph C. Cissel, of Silver Spring, a Co. K sergeant in World War I and a major in World War II, called the roll of Co. K, and former Sergt. Frank Buschman, now of Baltimore, answered for the comrades who have died.

Lee entertained the group with refreshments after the formal program.

The group will be welcomed at the Statler this afternoon by top Defense officials. Monday and Tuesday they will hear off-the-record discussions of the world political and military situation and an accounting of the state of our military forces.

Secretary of Defense Johnson will address the conference, followed by George F. Kennan, director of planning for the State Department, and the civilian and military heads of the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Budget Director Frank Pace, jr., and Atomic Energy Commissioner Sumner T. Pike also are on the list of lecturers.

On Wednesday morning the group leaves by plane for Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., and Fort Benning, Ga., for Air Force and Army demonstrations. The conference ends with an ocean trip on the aircraft carrier Midway next weekend.

The entire high command will be aboard the flattop for carrier demonstrations. Secretary Johnson plans to join the group at sea Monday, September 26, via helicopter.

Coal Welfare Fund

John L. Lewis' announcement of suspension of payments from the UMW welfare fund follows his vitriolic attack on the Southern coal operators who have withheld contributions to the fund since their contract with the union expired last July. Mr. Lewis has always insisted that his miners are not obligated to work unless they have a contract, although he has currently made an exception to this general rule by permitting them to work a few days each week. By the same reasoning the delinquent companies can make a strong argument that the obligation to contribute to the welfare fund lapsed along with the contract.

There is a good deal more at stake, however, than the question of the obligation of the companies to contribute to the fund. The fact that the fund is unable to discharge its own obligations to the men and women who are dependent on the welfare benefits and pensions they have been promised is of first importance. The plight of the fund emphasizes the inherent unsoundness of this kind of industrial pension fund based on contributions from employers which vary with the amount of coal mined. Even if Mr. Lewis' miners were working under contract and all the companies were contributing 20 cents to the fund for each ton of coal mined, receipts would decline rapidly owing to the loss of tonnage resulting from lower demands for coal and the shorter working week decreed by the mine head.

It was evident some time ago that it would be necessary to increase the royalty contributions, if the fund were to continue its generous scale of benefits. Now it is rumored that Mr. Lewis will demand that the royalty be upped to 40 cents per ton. A depressed industry that is already suffering from the increased competition of other fuels can meet such demands only by restricting output, closing marginal mines and adding to the numbers of unemployed.

The financial difficulties of the pension fund emphasize the danger of private welfare programs based on actuarially unsound methods of financing. Mr. Lewis' success in coercing the mine operators into setting up this fund has frequently been cited as an example for other industries to follow. It has undoubtedly put pressure on Philip Murray to demand similar benefits from the steel industry, especially as steel companies owning so-called captive mines contribute to the miners' fund. The plight of the unfortunate men and women who have been suddenly cut off from mine fund benefits should be a warning to other unions against pushing demands for pensions without impartial actuarial cost estimates and a careful study of the ability of the industry to meet the necessary payments.

Hawaii's Vicious Circle

After several days of fruitless attempts at mediation in New York, the 4½-month-old Hawaii longshoremen's strike is back practically where it started. If there is to be a settlement between employers and Harry Bridges' International Longshoremen's Union any time soon, the chances are that it will be reached informally in Hawaii without the benefit of Federal mediators.

From the employers' standpoint the issue remains acute if somewhat camouflaged. They fear that if they agree to the unlimited arbitration Mr. Bridges has been demanding, it will also set the pattern for the island's sugar and pineapple industries and they will lose control of their own operations. Whatever they may offer on wages, they are likely to resist this kind of arbitration to the last ditch.

The union's intentions are still more devious. Mr. Bridges has consistently boasted that he would break the hold of Hawaii's big industrialists. It is not unlikely that he is relying on the possibility of an East Coast shipping strike by AFL unions after September 30 to reinforce him. Most of the cargoes moving to Hawaii now originate on the East Coast, since Mr. Bridges' CIO union controls shipping on the Pacific Coast.

In Hawaii proper, meanwhile, there is the paradoxical situation of ILWU members crossing their own picket lines to load Navy ships. The Legislature's seizure law, under which the docks are operated by the Territorial government, has been at least partially successful, and some reports put the traffic now at 80 per cent of normal. The strain on Hawaii's economy, particularly in employment, remains, however, and if an East Coast strike should develop, the situation again would become perilous.

Short of an outright draft of labor, which is repugnant to Americans, there obviously is no panacea in legislation. Congress can hardly remain insensitive, however, to the plight of outlying territories dependent on shipping, whose economies periodically are upset by stoppages. Moreover, the maritime industry itself is suffering sorely as a result of labor unrest, and the higher costs are reflected in more and more Government subsidy which the public pays. A mature view of labor relations requires the acknowledgment that the public interest cannot tolerate perennial threats to vital services such as shipping. If the solution is not to be compulsory arbitration, Congress may have to provide for the maritime industry machinery similar to that set up by the Railway Labor Act. But even this machinery cannot work, as current experience shows, unless there is a determination by both sides to make it work.

Releasing Dollars

In permitting Britain to buy wheat in Canada with Marshall Plan dollars, ECA Administrator Hoffman has taken advantage of the "insofar as practicable" clause in the buy-American provision of the law. Whether this move can be supported as consistent with the spirit of the law depends on the intent of Congress. In our view, the clause was intended to enable the ECA Administrator to meet emergencies. We believe that Mr. Hoffman's interpretation is reasonable, if the primary purpose of ECA is to be regarded as economic recovery rather than the disposal of American farm surpluses.

As a matter of fact, the requirement that ECA dollars be used to purchase surplus American wheat was frustrating the very recovery ECA was designed to accomplish. Britain already is bound up in a long-term wheat contract with Canada calling for payment in dollars. If she had been forced to buy American wheat with ECA money, this would have meant that she would have had to dig farther into her dollar reserves to fulfill her commitments to Canada. In practice Britain had determined not to purchase American wheat and to make the best of the dollar drain involved in the Canadian contract. Thus the immediate result of the liberalized rule permitting Britain to use ECA funds in Canada is to enable her to purchase with her own money some 40 million dollars worth of commodities in the United States which she had not planned to buy. As Agriculture Secretary Brannan pointed out, this amounts to a net gain for American farmers.

The confusion caused by the strings in the ECA law demonstrates the folly of an attempt to tie foreign aid to markets for American surpluses. Occasionally the two ends are compatible; but a mandatory requirement that other countries purchase surpluses usually means that the normal trade pattern is distorted, with a detrimental effect on recovery. In any case, the use to be made of surpluses in the foreign aid program ought to be left to voluntary agreement.

There is, however, one way in which surplus American farm products can help relieve the dollar tension. That is in the exchange of such commodities for critical and strategic materials produced abroad—an exchange which, as this newspaper noted editorially last week, is sanctioned in the amendments to the Commodity Credit Corporation charter. It is encouraging in this regard that the Department of Agriculture is actively working on plans for bartering dried and frozen eggs.

Of course the value of such an exchange would be destroyed by viewing it as a means of dumping unwanted farm surpluses. Barter transactions become mutually advantageous when other countries trade us raw materials for commodities they need and which otherwise would cost them dollars. In particular the proposal has relevance for such Sterlingaria members as India. India produces strategic materials which the United States wants for stockpiling; at the same time she buys from this country agricultural products for which she needs scarce dollars from Britain. Nor are the possibilities confined to the Commonwealth. The exchange would apply to virtually all sterling countries which import food from the United States.

In part the problem is to overcome the resistance of the British, who have been dragging their feet in the hope that they can obtain dollars for strategic materials. Undoubtedly there are some areas in which dollar purchases by this country can be increased; but the barter operation also can serve as an auxiliary method of relieving the strain on the dollar pool. Indeed, it is even possible that new uses could be found abroad for such commodities as corn, which has relatively little foreign market. The raw material exchange is one of the best ways in which the dominions and colonies can increase their aid by lessening their demands on Britain.

Several administrative limitations are involved in the exchange, among them the amount of strategic materials the Munitions Board can take. But there is no reason why the stockpiling program cannot be speeded up and a bookkeeping arrangement effected between Commodity Credit and the Munitions Board. Basically the Administration has two necessary steps to take: First, to convince dollar-short countries of the desirability of the exchange, and then to come up with a coordinated plan for the Federal agencies instrumental to the program.

Belasco Revival

The long-discussed problem of restoring the old Belasco to useful service as a legitimate theater has at last been approached on what seems to be a realistic and genuinely hopeful basis. According to our drama critic, Richard L. Coe, 50 United States Senators have signed a letter to the executive committee of the American National Theater and Academy stating that they will support legislation to compensate that organization for a proportionate amount of the money spent in remodeling the Belasco in the event that the Government should recapture the building prior to the expiration of a 10-year lease. A recapture clause must be included in any contract leasing the Belasco, although it is unlikely to be invoked. And neither ANTA nor any other theatrical organization can afford to undertake the considerable cost of reconditioning the theater without assurance of at least a decade's tenure or idemnification.

The unorthodox pledge of the 50 Senators removes what seemed to be an insuperable obstacle. If ANTA grasps the offer, it can begin at last the fulfillment of the function for which Congress chartered it in 1935—encouragement of the dramatic arts and of a genuinely American theater. And for the people of Washington, it will mean a revival of theatrical entertainment of the highest caliber. There is no doubt that this community will enthusiastically support a legitimate theater providing quality entertainment. Neither is there any doubt, as the experience of the Washington Theater Festival in Meridian Hill Park throughout the summer has demonstrated, that this community will welcome a theater operated on a nondiscriminatory basis. The 50 Senators have opened up a great opportunity both to the Capital and to the theater as an institution.

Situation Wanted (Male)

We can't help feeling a bit sorry for Mr. Earl Browder, who has been fired from his job as American business representative of OGIZ, the Soviet publishing monopoly, and is now looking around for almost any kind of work "at which I can earn my living." It's a rather tough predicament for a man of Mr. Browder's age, which, if our reference materials are accurate, is pretty close to 60.

Obviously, Mr. Browder is just another of the innumerable victims of the class war and the insidious operations of the business cycle under the profit system. Everybody knows that the bookselling business has been in a bad way lately and that the market for books of the sort Mr. Browder has been trying to sell has grown virtually nonexistent. It is not astonishing, then, that the home office in Moscow should have decided to close out Mr. Browder's agency. It is said, however, that Mr. Browder's contract with OGIZ (the accent, we believe, is on the second syllable), has two years to run, so that he is free to sue in the Soviet courts if he wishes to, provided he can find a lawyer to represent him and can obtain a visa from the Soviet diplomatic authorities that would enable him to testify. But to take advantage of a mere technicality like that would be a low, bourgeois trick and we honestly don't think Mr. Browder is capable of it.

Of course, it could be argued that business in general, and the book business in particular, are hardly Mr. Browder's milieu. It seems to us that, after his expulsion from the party, he overlooked the opportunity to pick up a nice pile in royalties by writing his confessions after the example of his former associates like Comrade Gitlow and Comrade Budenz.

Implementing Hoover

The Junior Chamber of Commerce of the United States has set up a fund of $80,000 for an educational program on behalf of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. In this the Junior Chamber has recognized, commendably, we think, the great public interest in the economies and streamlining possible in governmental reform. A considerable number of the Hoover commission's recommendations already have been put into effect, the most noteworthy being embodied in the Tydings Act, which extends unification of the armed forces, and in the President's Reorganization Plan No. 2. A great deal, however, remains to be done. The costy squabble between the Army Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, for example, has not been touched. and Congress has vetoed the President's plan to establish a Department of Welfare. Much of the inertia undoubtedly arises from a distaste for invading the pet political preserves of legislators. In this respect the job is not so much one of educating the general public as of convincing the President and legislators of the existing popular demand for governmental reform.

THE WIND BY THE WAY

I sing for the flower of youth in my heart,
I shout for the banner of youth unfurled,
And I ride to enter the city of gold.
But I pause by the old trees standing apart;
For the wind that has wept at the edge of the world,
The wind that is old as the years are old,
Had bidden the whispering branches say:
"The hosts who ride in the night have hurled
A thousand darts at the banner you hold;
The pools run dry at the end of the world,
And you will come to the city of gold
When the flower in your heart has withered away."

Sales Tax Effects

The District of Columbia sales tax and increases in various other kinds of local taxes have been in effect only a short time, but already it is apparent that official estimates of their yield were considerably short of actual receipts.

The sales tax is producing about 1¼ million dollars a month, about three million dollars annually above the official estimate. The cigaret tax, on the basis of early experience, is running about $100,000 a month, or about 25 percent above advance estimates.

An article, "Are D. C. Taxes Really Low?" in the May issue of the Home Builders Monthly shows that owners of identical properties in the District and in nearby Maryland and Virginia pay about the same amount in taxes, with the District owner paying a little more than his enfranchised neighbors.

The sales tax and other levies also hit the owner of real estate. If the home owner who is buying a tiny bungalow purchases wallboard to finish his attic to make room for his growing family, he must pay the sales tax on the materials. Of course he pays the higher real estate tax as well. This is no argument against the sales tax. However, we feel that it warrants reconsideration of the real estate tax; and we hope you will agree that this tax, now $2.15, should be put back to $1.75 per $1000 valuation, where it was until 1947.

"Murdered" Art

I have read the article in your issue of September 11 entitled "A Work of Art is Quietly Murdered at A. U." I have been a student at American University for the past three years, and have eaten three meals a day in the Mary Graydon Hall cafeteria. I have been monfronted with Mr. Galloway's work of art for a little over two of these three years.

The fresco has, since its completion, come in for an enormous amount of ridicule and criticism by the students. The most frequently heard observation is that a cafeteria is no place for a mural of that nature. Hairy, muddy legs and squared-off, unmanicured toenails do little to improve the appetites of the students.

Perhaps if the fresco had been done in Hurst Hall, the classroom building, it might have remained; that I don't know. I also do not know if the administration was fully cognizant of the "murder"; but I do know that it would be completely justified in quietly disposing of the fresco under the present circumstances.

True, Mr. Galloway contributed one of his pioneer efforts in the realm of art to the university; but it seems to me that if Mr. Galloway was so anxious to preserve a mural for posterity he would have done better to execute it upon a wall of his house, or perhaps upon a wall of Watkins Gallery, the A. U. art gallery. There, at least, he could have kept his eye on it.

Transit Radio

Did I incorrectly infer that Mr. Carl L. Shipley, in his letter of August 30, disapproves of the opportunity the Public Utilities Commission will provide for objectors to streetcar radio to have a few hours to air their objections?

No poll of transit users was made, to my knowledge, before the radio programs were instituted, and since the use of this private utility monopoly is a necessity for many persons, at least some official notice should be taken of the feelings of those who use it.

The choice of whether or not a person has to listen to a radio is a freedom we should not lightly abolish. The revenue derived by Capital Transit has not even been offered as a means to lower our streetcar and bus rates. Why should one pay to be forced to listen away from home to what he would not think of listening to on his own radio?

Preventing Suicides

Recently on my way to work I rode in a taxi under the Calvert Street Bridge past the body of a man who had leaped from the bridge a few minutes before.

It seems to me that Washington has need of an organization similar to one which already exists in Manhattan. The New York group publicizes its telephone number and encourages anyone contemplating suicide to phone at any time, day or night; the individuals who respond to the telephone calls by talking with, or visiting, the would-be suicides are trained lay persons. The organization also cooperates with other groups in its attempts to aid the persons who ask for help.

Council Of Europe

The Council of Europe was described as the "Parliament of Europe," according to news reports from the Continent. This phrase was misleading, for the council had no legislative functions, nor has it established permanent agencies.

The nations can accept or reject the council's recommendations at their own discretion. The committee of ministers of the council and the Security Council of the U. N. are alike in this respect.

Nationalism played a major role during deliberations of western European statesmen. No member nation of the council, represented by unofficial delegates, was willing to give a portion of its sovereignty to a higher authority. The delegates did, however, express the conviction that Europe must federate politically and economically in order to survive.

Political and economic union would, in the long run, solve many of Europe's problems. It would also create the necessary impetus for the establishment of a world government.

European federation would be a step toward world federation. A world federation would eliminate power politics and anarchy from the area of international cooperation which is necessary to prevent economic coercion and avert atomic war.

Peiping Under The Communists

I am enclosing excerpts from a letter written from Peiping, China, since the Communist occupation. The author, Miss Alice M. Huggins of Topeka, Kans., is a mission teacher of many years' experience who returned to China three years ago after an absence during the war.

JAMES F. DAVIDSON.
Washington.

". . . I was in Peiping for the two months while the Communists were taking over and getting themselves established, having left Tunghsien only a few hours before they came in. There was some fighting, but it didn't amount to much. School opened February 21, and I came a few days before that. We had fewer students—only about 400 instead of over 500. But they were almost all of them our own girls, so the changes, though radical, were not made with ill feeling between faculty and students. For instance, politeness to one's elders has lost official sanction, and there is strong anti-American propaganda handed out to the children all the time from headquarters, but no girl has ever been rude to me, and they come constantly to the house, though they know such things are reported.

"It isn't just we few Americans who have to get used to new ways. All our Chinese neighbors are going through the process, and with them it has to be more thorough. They have constant 'training.' For instance, all the schoolteachers have been spending an hour and a half every evening studying Communist books, not just one week, but ever since February, and now they all have to go for an intensive month of training in Peiping, leaving only about three weeks' vacation in which all the preparations for fall term must be made, the entrance exams given and graded. At the same time, another training class is being held for the students, also a month long and also full days. They all have to furnish their own food and living quarters.

"At present very few Chinese are Communists, but the ones who are are having control of everything: press, radio, schools, police, and every phase of the government, and they are working literally day and night frantically trying, by every means they know to convince the whole population. They use very cleverly every method we Christians have ever had, especially songs, plays, meetings, and an appeal to idealism and self-sacrifice.

"The whole thing is directed toward the children and youth, who within these few months since the Communists have had control have been organized and kept so busy with all kinds of activities that even the studious ones have been unable to find time to study. One of their most effective methods is repetition. If you hear a thing enough times it's hard not to remember it, whether you started out by agreeing with it or not. And there is no place in the regime for an adverse opinion.

"From an American point of view, one of the disconcerting things is that there seem to be no rules. We're partial, to 'due process of law.' Here each place is run by the local officials and there's no uniformity. Conditions in the country districts are reported to be as they have been for several years—you have heard plenty of stories of confiscation of property and punishment of the 'rich.'

"This week one of our best students reported that they had lost the family property, both land and house, and her mother had been sentenced to beg for her food for three years because they were 'rich landowners.' Their entire property had not been more than 50 acres, which is a big farm in this vicinity. The two daughters can come to school if they like, but they are paupers. That process seems to continue all through the rural districts.

"Peiping seems practically the same as it was before the turnover, except for the discarding of the old social customs. Here in Tunghsien we are about halfway between. For instance, one of the mottoes of the new government is 'religious freedom.' In Peiping religious activities go on as before. In rural districts, all the churches are closed, and what little activity there is is in the homes. Here we have service on Sunday, not so well attended as before, and very little else.

". . . We Americans here hope the United States will be the first to recognize this new government. It would seem to us that there is everything to gain and nothing to lose. Whatever happens, we Americans must not give any more help to Chiang's government, not at this stage of the game.

Rising Farm Price Debate

By Mark Sullivan

Forgotten Consumer

PRESIDENT TRUMAN, in his Labor Day speech at Des Moines, Iowa, called for adoption of the new Administration plan for price support of farm crops, the Brannan Plan. Conceivably he could have had in mind adoption in the present session of Congress. But the House has already rejected the Brannan Plan, and Democratic leaders in both branches of Congress show clear reluctance to adopt it.

A more probable surmise is that Mr. Truman wishes to hold the Brannan Plan before Congress in its second session, which will begin in January. That session will coincide with the Nation-wide campaign for election of a new Congress, and a common assumption is that Mr. Truman's two Labor Day speeches were the opening of next year's campaign.

In any event existing conditions point toward a full-dress debate in Congress about price support as a whole, both the system as it now exists and operates, and proposed changes. Such a debate, taking place during a Nation-wide campaign, with members of Congress campaigning in their States and districts, should lead to public discussion and enlightenment on a subject deeply fundamental but so far little understood by the people.

PRICE support as it is operated today has purposes and effects quite different from when the idea was first put forward. The early price support laws were enacted during the 1930s, when farming was under a disadvantage relative to other industries. The purpose was to assure, for six "basic" farm crops, prices which should not go below a limited percentage of the prices of goods generally. The original six have now been expanded to cover practically everything raised on a farm. The price support laws of the 1930s are now kept in effect at a time when farming is a preferred industry, with an income immensely larger than it ever had before, beneficiary of an increase in income greater than other industries have had.

Others of the price support laws were passed in the early years of the war, with the purpose of stimulating farmers to raise larger crops needed for war conditions. These wartime laws remain in effect more than four years after the war ended.

Last year in the Republican Eightieth Congress there was recognition of need for revision of the price support laws. That Congress enacted a moderate revision, the Hope-Aiken law. This would have made price support flexible, permitting the Department of Agriculture to fix somewhat lower support prices for some crops. At the time of passage the Hope-Aiken law had assent or support from many farmers and leaders of farm organizations.

THE HOPE-AIKEN law was to take effect next year. Meanwhile, in the present Congress, some of the more aggressive partisans of price support propose repeal of the Hope-Aiken law. Some political partisans of price support go further than many farmers themselves. Proponents of repeal of the Hope-Aiken law want support prices to continue high. Having seen the coverage of the original six crops expand to nearly all crops, and seen prices of crops fantastically higher than when price support was begun, they are nevertheless unwilling to see a reduction.

The more extreme partisans of price support in Congress judge and compare proposed changes by a simple standard: Will it result in more for farmers? But a small though influential and increasing number in Congress begin to take account of another standard. Whether for a political motive or because of statesmanlike understanding, they begin to consider the public, the consumer.

Democratic Senate Leader Lucas said last month that price support has "gone too far," that "people will be so bitter that we'll break the whole Federal farm program down." And a little while before Democratic House Leader McCormack of Massachusetts said: "It is about time that somebody in this debate say a few words for a forgotten class in America—the consumer." About price support as it now is, he said that "ultimately, as every one of us knows in our own minds, [it] will destroy the whole farm program and bring about a general disrespect for Government itself."

This point of view, consideration of price support in its relation to the public and to the Government, is certain to have increasing weight in the discussion in Congress which apparently is certain to take place, whether through President Truman's pressure for the Administration's new Brannan Plan or otherwise. Even persons who believe in some form of price support have come to see that the sheer cost of it as now operated is intolerable, at a time when there is justified concern about the expenses of Government being materially larger than its income.

Jessup Forging New Asia Policy

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

ONE significant and unreported disagreement arose in the vitally important talks on Asia policy last week between Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin. There was general agreement on policy in Japan, southeast Asia and India. Moreover, contrary to report, there was no dispute about Hongkong. Bevin flatly told Acheson that the British mean to defend Hongkong if it is attacked but that there is no present intention of asking for American help.

However, Bevin refused to go along with Acheson on economic policy in China. The State Department wants the power, in effect, to cut off China's trade with the West. The British, with their vast holdings in China, want only to control the shipment of war material and munitions. This disagreement, which deeply affects Anglo-American policy in Asia, clearly springs from the desperate economic plight of the British. It will end only when the threat of British economic collapse is ended.

Yet more really significant than the outcome of the Acheson-Bevin talks is the simple fact that a positive and vigorous American policy in Asia is now at last being evolved, thanks to the efforts of able Ambassador-at-Large Philip Jessup. Jessup was recently assigned by Acheson to examine the whole range of American Far Eastern policy and to come up with a series of recommendations for American action.

75 Million to Spend

THE work of Jessup and his staff is still in the thinking stage and there's a wide gulf between thinking and action. But at least the thinking has been intelligent and imaginative. One project which Jessup and his staff have been considering calls for an American supreme commander for the battle for Asia.

Through no efforts of its own, the State Department will now get a discretionary kitty of 75 million dollars under the Military Aid Program to fight this battle. If this money is to be spent in dribs and drabs, without any coherent plan or central authority, it will be wasted. It is proposed instead that a man of great stature be found to spend the money where it will do the most good. He could use it to strengthen the centers of resistance to the Communists in China, or to arm non-Communists in southeast Asia, or to promote American interests in such other ways as he saw fit.

Moreover, he would control all American trade with China. And within very broad limits, he would have the authority to take whatever action seemed necessary to promote the central American objective in Asia—a grouping of sovereign national states strong enough to withstand the Kremlin's drive for power. Obviously this project would cut down the authority of the State Department's Far Eastern Division, which is, therefore, throwing cold water on the idea.

Jessup himself has not finally decided in favor of the idea, nor has Acheson. Much will depend on whether a man can be found with the ability and reputation necessary to do the job. As always these days, when there are difficult and vitally important jobs to be done, the advocates of the project have settled on the name of former Undersecretary of State Robert Lovett. Lovett may be sounded out by Jessup himself when Jessup goes to New York for the United Nations meetings.

Three-Point Statement

AT ANY rate, whether or not it comes to anything in the end, it is something new under the sun to find bold and positive plans for action in Asia emerging from the State Department. Jessup and his staff have also come up with another important idea—a major policy statement by President Truman. Acheson and Truman have been discussing this matter and as a result the statement may soon be made.

What is proposed is a brief, simple statement, containing three major points. First, the United States strongly favors genuinely independent regimes in Asia. Second, the United States will strongly oppose Communist regimes, since these are not genuinely independent, but a new form of imperialism. Third, the United States is determined to do everything possible to help raise the living standards of the Asian people.

The real purpose of the proposed statement is simply to reassure the Asian leaders that the United States has no intention of abandoning Asia, as most Asians now believe. If it accomplishes this purpose, the statement will have a deeply important psychological effect.

All this means real progress, even though the inertia of the State Department, where Asia is concerned, may defeat Jessup's efforts in the end. As the disagreement on China suggests, any American effort will also be defeated if the British crisis is allowed to lead to British collapse. For Asia can only be saved if the United States and Britain work in close partnership, and a powerless partner is a useless partner.

Even so, there are signs that the long paralysis of American policy in Asia may be coming to an end and that at least is something to be thankful for.

Long-Haul Strategy

Russia Ends Speedup

By Edwin D. Grits
Post Reporter

ALMOST wholly concealed by current Communist polemics over such things as Titoism is Russia's gradually changing emphasis from emergency to long-range methods of wiping out capitalism everywhere.

Although military elements in the Soviet orbit are still receiving prime attention for any eventuality, the Kremlin now seems to feel there is less risk of self-destruction in fighting capitalism with overwhelming ideological and economic forces.

In line with this, Soviet leaders are reported to be making a special effort to attract world attention by widely publicizing what they call the "chill breath of economic crisis" in western Europe and the United States, while eastern Europe and the Soviet Union are prospering.

The authoritative Moscow weekly journal New Times reflects this ideological-economic wooing with particular clarity in such a recent declaration as:

"Faced with the onset of an economic crisis and a decline in industrial output and foreign trade, west European ruling circles are no longer able to ignore the fact that their neighbors in eastern Europe are countries where economic crises do not and will not occur, and where industry and foreign trade are rapidly and confidently expanding. These countries might be profitable trade clients."

Observers here point out, however, that much of the impetus behind this wooing is Russia's own critical need for raw materials and trade to implement the growing emphasis on economic expansion and high-level production.

'Storming' Dropped

TO guarantee the success of this long-haul strategy for throttling capitalism by political-economic might, the Politburo is reported to have launched a series of orders for a new approach to production and party leadership.

As for production, Communist Party leaders have been told to end "storming" or production "by fits and starts." While admittedly encouraged as part of any means to gain strength after the war, storming is declared to have ended its usefulness now that Russia is entering a new stage of sustained, high-level production.

Production by fits and starts, observed Pravda in an editorial less than two weeks ago, "interferes with the efficiency of the factories, encourages breakages, involves unnecessary expense for overtime, and keeps the works in a state of feverish activity."

Furthermore, Pravda points out, "the true Socialist culture is to produce consistently and rhythmically high quality goods over a long period of time."

The paper also stresses that "since the war, many of our enterprises have been restored and developed on new lines. They are being equipped with the most modern machinery and, therefore, our industry can, and must, work in an organized manner."

Reaction of Hate

SOVIET efficiency experts are also reported to be seeking some way of stepping up the output of a vast number of workers whose limited abilities do not provide them with any incentive for higher wages or production honors.

While information about this segment of Soviet labor is said to be closely guarded by the Kremlin, it is known that past advocates of direct "coercion" are more and more fearful of what is said to be a growing political hatred which is being repeatedly expressed in production breakdowns.

Except for this unsolved and most serious problem, Soviet planners are reported to be stepping ahead with large-scale programs of industrial mechanization and innumerable special drives to place all production on a high, competitive level.

A typical example of the many decrees being issued is one disclosed in the July 14 issue of Izvestia, which declared: "All mines damaged during the war must be fully restored by 1950 and coal production must be brought to 250 million tons. This requires complete mechanization of labor-consuming and heavy work in the mines."

Notable among the special drives for all-out production is a new program which calls upon large enterprises to become "patrons" of small local enterprises. One account of this program reveals that in Moscow alone, 500 small plants are benefiting directly from the know-how of large industries in the area.

The Moscow Toolmaking Plant, for instance, is not only supplying guidance and mechanical equipment to the Stalin Borough Metal Goods Plant but is also placing usable industrial waste at the disposal of the smaller plant.

Inventors Prodded

HAND IN HAND with increasing production pressures, Soviet planners are reported to be placing added controls on scientists and inventors—all with the purpose of bending every effort toward immediate problems.

In justifying the "necessity of control over innovators," Soviet taskmasters stress the crucial importance of solving such "concrete problems as increases in unit machine productivity; economies in the use of fuel, metal, and electricity, and the need of speedup labor-saving devices."

All the while, Soviet leaders are also pressing their companion drive to make Communist ideology invulnerable at home and tempting abroad.

In discussing Russian production, for instance, a repeated theme is the superiority of the Soviet approach to production "while capitalism retards the process of science and technology and utilizes them as means of exploitation . . ."

Party workers, meanwhile, are being urged to become fully acquainted with political forces abroad as well as at home. This, incidentally, is regarded as somewhat of an innovation since only the topmost, highly trusted Communists have hitherto been allowed to expose themselves to Western thinking.

An apparently official explanation of this, however, is contained in a recent Pravda editorial which says in part: "In order to be able to guide the masses, one must be able to give a satisfactory explanation of the greatest contemporary problems both on the home front and abroad . . . In order to cope with modern problems, the party worker must constantly extend his own party outlook and raise the standard of his knowledge."

Stringent Broadening

THIS policy of knowing your enemies as well as your friends seems to have been also prescribed for students, according to a recent pronouncement by A. Voznesensky, Minister of Education for the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic. While stressing that the primary task is complete understanding of Communist ideology, Voznesensky adds:

"The duty of the teacher and class instructor includes acquainting pupils, according to their age, with political events taking place inside our country and abroad . . ."

How extensive or objective this acquaintanceship with foreign events is to be can be surmised from a related observation appearing in a recent issue of the Bolshevik, authoritative biweekly on political and economic thought. The Bolshevik declares:

"Bourgeois objectivity, which has seeped into some spheres, was meant to blunt the edge of Bolshevist education and weaken its militant spirit . . .

"A most important part of the Communist education of the workers is the struggle against servile admiration of the bourgeois culture and against cosmopolitanism. There is no more important task in education than the activation of Soviet patriotism . . ."

Voters Oppose More China Aid

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

ALTHOUGH the man in the street is far removed from the China scene and is not well informed about the intricate situation there, a survey conducted shortly after publication of the Government's white paper on China reveals the following attitudes and impressions of United States voters today:

1. More than one out of three (36 percent) American voters questioned said they had heard or read about the Government's recent report on China. This figure compares with 79 percent who said they had been following the civil war in China, as reported in December, 1948.

2. More than half (53 percent) of voters who were familiar with the white paper expressed disapproval of the way the United States Government has handled the China situation, while 26 percent approved. Republicans were considerably more critical of the Administration's China policy than were Democrats.

3. A majority of voters with opinions think the Communists will take over all of China. And among voters familiar with the white paper, six out of 10 expressed the view that the whole of China will ultimately fall to the Communists.

4. The weight of voter opinion today is against the United States doing anything now to stop China from going Communist. However, about one-fifth of the voters questioned said they think the United States should still try to find a way to send aid—military and economic—to the Chinese Nationalists.

5. There is widespread belief among voters that Chiang Kai-shek is not the man to lead China out of her dilemma. A majority of voters with opinions have an unfavorable impression of the generalissimo today.

Two-thirds (67 percent) of those voters with the greatest amount of education said they had heard or read about the White Paper.

Informed voters, those who had heard or read about the report, were then asked:

"What is your opinion of the way the Government has handled the China situation?"

	All Voters	Voters Familiar With Report
Disapproval ("Very poor"; "U. S. blundered," "U. S. should have given more help," etc.)	53%
Approval ("Very good"; "U. S. did best it could," etc.)	26
U. S. should help China	1
U. S. should stay out of China	2
Don't know	18

"Is there anything the United States should do, in your opinion, to stop China from going Communist?"

Yes:	All Voters	Voters Familiar With Report

The table adds to more than 100 percent because some voters named more than one thing.

Senate Maps Turkey Day Agenda

By Drew Pearson

THE Senate Democratic Policy Committee, meeting behind closed doors the other day, calmly mapped a program that may keep it going until Thanksgiving, and may even include civil rights.

It was Vice President Barkley who injected this dynamite-laden subject. "We've got to bring up civil rights," he pleaded earnestly.

Surprisingly, Georgia's Senator Dick Russell, spokesman for the Southern Democrats, piped up "We might as well bring it up now and get it over with."

Alabama's Senator Lister Hill agreed, though both made it clear they would oppose civil rights with all their lung power.

Sentiment was also strong to force out the displaced persons bill, which Nevada's mule-headed Pat McCarran has been blocking. Majority Leader Scott Lucas warned that McCarran would filibuster against it but predicted the filibuster could be broken in a week.

Positive action, however, was taken on the next three issues to be debated on the Senate floor—arms for Europe, a farm program, and salary increases for Government officials.

That finished the serious business, but not the monkey business. Vice President Barkley couldn't get away without some kidding about his St. Louis romance. Fulbright even offered him a honeymoon cottage which a constituent was willing to sell.

"No," smiled Barkley good-naturedly, "I lived in a house long enough."

Jonathan Comes Through

DOWN in North Carolina, the man who really counts with the Truman Administration is Jonathan Daniels, son of the famed Navy Secretary in Wilson's Cabinet.

Jonathan is now editor of the Raleigh News and Observer. When various other North Carolinians deserted the Truman bandwagon, Jonathan not only stuck with Truman but traveled the Truman train and helped write some of the most effective speeches. Later, Jonathan declined the job of Navy Secretary, but, as illustrated by a recent off-the-record incident, he continues to rate high at the White House.

George P. Shaw, American Ambassador to Nicaragua, was having trouble with other career diplomats, who demanded his transfer, and he needed political support to keep his post. Finally a friendly high official at the State Department advised him:

"Don't you know anyone at the White House who could help?"

Shaw thought a minute, finally replied: "I know Jonathan Daniels down in North Carolina."

"Then call him," Shaw was advised.

The Ambassador did. Daniels did know Shaw and was anxious to help.

"However, this puts me in a tough spot," he explained. "I've just recommended Capus Waynick for your job as Ambassador to Nicaragua."

Waynick had been North Carolina campaign manager for Truman and Governor Kerr Scott last November.

However, Daniels was equal to the occasion. In the end he got jobs for both his friends. Waynick was made Ambassador to Nicaragua, while Shaw was made Ambassador to El Salvador.

Dodging Britain's Basic Problem

IT'S THE off-the-record opinion of experts who assisted in the British-American monetary talks that Cripps and Snyder only scratched the surface.

A big publicity splash resulted from the press communique, but this was largely for political consumption back in Britain, and actually the British are just about as badly off as they were before.

Foreign Minister Bevin toyed with the only long-range proposal which might eventually solve British ills—an economic union between England, the United States and Canada. Bevin's ideas were vague as to how such an economic alliance could be carried out, but some of the experts feel that in the long run such a union would be cheaper than constantly bailing Britain out.

However, what the conference failed to grapple with were these two basic facts:

1. Britain's natural market for manufactured goods is the less industrialized agricultural areas behind the iron curtain—Russia, Poland, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria. As long as Britain is barred from getting Soviet wheat in exchange for manufactured goods, she has got to have some compensation from the West.

2. There can be no sound prosperity in western Europe unless tariff barriers are broken down between France, Italy, England and Belgium, plus the others, in order to create one big trading area under a United States of Europe.

The basic reason for American prosperity is our tremendous and diversified domestic market with the interchange of goods between the industrial Northeast and the agricultural South and West.

Looking at the South

Creative Writing Sets the Pace

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss.—This is about two books, one a political study and the other a novel, which are being published this week. They have nothing in common except that each is written by a Southerner, each has the South as background and each is a worthy contribution to its interpretation.

The political study is "Southern Politics," by V. O. Key, jr., who was aided principally by Alexander Heard and who had a mass of statistical material gathered by a considerable number of fellow political scientists. The work was financed at the University of Alabama by the Rockefeller Foundation.

There is no contradicting the story it so vividly tells. It is not an encouraging story, but it is not a hopeless one; and the more it is read and comprehended the better chance the South has for changing it. The difficulty lies in getting the book into enough hands, which is the difficulty with all serious and provocative studies.

The novel is "Tournament," by my young fellow-Greenvillian, Shelby Foote. It is an unusual first novel. Its background is the Delta section of Mississippi two generations ago. But it is not a historical novel, except in a limited sense, and it is not a problem novel, of which there are already too many.

Rather, Shelby Foote has told the story of a human being, which is a more difficult thing to do, and in it he interprets sensitively the basic loneliness of man. "Tournament" is more than just a good first novel; and we in Greenville are especially pleased that we have produced a sixth writer to gain a national audience in recent years.

And aside from community boasting, this is a significant aspect of the South today; and in contrast to our low political estate it is a contradictory one. Out of a troubled past which was not noted for a creative spirit or any great interest in literature, there has emerged a noteworthy creative movement. The number and quality of Southern writers underscore our cultural growth. There are also other and less dramatic expressions of this development; and it is being paralleled by an economic advance which also affords striking though unrelated evidence of the changing South.

But political maturity has not been similarly achieved in these forward years. Few persons will believe, after reading Dr. Key's story, that it will soon be achieved.

The mind of the South, so alert in all things else, is still largely stultified in its political expression. The devices for limitation and control of the electorate, the manipulation by the few, the lethargy of the many, the balefulness of one-party politics—all these are still with us.

Here and there is proof in the South that the transition can be made. The hopefulness that faintly tinges "Southern Politics" can be strengthened for the reader when he realizes with the author of "Tournament" that the South was until so recently a frontier society. This is no excuse. But it is in part an explanation.

F St. Has Big Role in Easing the Dollar Famine

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

THE SHOPPER on F st. is going to be a key man—and a key woman—in world affairs from now on.

The American, British and Canadian governments have decided that it is a life-or-death matter for Britain to sell more goods in American markets. The British are prepared to make the selling drive; the United States Government will encourage them.

France and the other Marshall Plan countries will also be encouraged to sell more goods here if they can. But the British will bear the brunt of the sales effort—for the simple reason that the British, more than any other people, must "export or die."

Their success in the American market will depend partly on the British worker who makes the goods, the British manufacturer who designs and prices them, and the British salesman who gets the orders. It will depend, too, on the understanding of American Congressmen and American producers, and on the tastes and pocketbooks of American shoppers.

Nobody expects Americans to "buy British" for reasons of sentiment or international goodwill. The British goods will have to be just right in style, in packaging, and in price, and they will have to be just as good value as the homemade product if they are to earn the dollars that Britain desperately needs.

These are hard conditions in the highly competitive American market. But if Britain can meet them, if next year's Christmas crowds hurry home from F st. with twice as many British goods as they bought before, then—so the three governments believe—Britain will be on the road to a self-supporting future.

IT SOUNDS easy when one remembers the insatiable American appetite for gadgets and new things. No market has ever been so big or so prosperous, or so obviously a place where energetic selling can earn fat dividends. No country has ever had an income that approaches a quarter of a trillion dollars a year, as the United States now has.

Paul Hoffman, the Economic Cooperation Administrator, has often said that if just 1 per cent of the national income were diverted to buying more foreign goods it probably would close the yawning gap between the dollars the British earn and the dollars they need to feed and supply their people.

But few British people yet realize how hard it is going to be. Since the end of the war the British have sold only about 3 per cent of their phenomenal exports in the United States. Most of their output, pushed abroad while their own consumers were strictly rationed, has gone to their prewar markets in India, the other Commonwealth countries, the Middle East and Africa. India and Egypt especially have been able to buy British goods by drawing on huge accumulations of sterling they built up in London during the war.

The British manufacturer has not had to fight for markets in these countries since the war ended. Until recently he could sell just about everything he could produce, in design and at sterling prices almost of his own choosing.

Why should he switch to making goods for America when he can earn good profits in non-dollar markets? If he wants to sell America cotton shirts, for example, or tropical worsted suits, he will have to change his styles to meet American tastes, cut his prices to meet American competition, and spend money on sales and advertising which might otherwise have gone into profits.

THE BRITISH government has already announced that it will give incentives to those who manufacture and sell in the United States. That is, it will have to make a distinction between those who set out to earn dollars and those who don't. It may remit taxes for dollar-earners, or give them easier access to scarce raw materials, or help them, as it is already doing, with government-financed market research.

For a country that fought the war and met its postwar problems on a basis of equality of sacrifice, this kind of favoritism will be hard and perhaps unpopular.

The American public, moreover, is finicky about style and packaging. It won't buy clothes that are not suited to the American climate or centrally-heated buildings; and, except in the luxury lines, it won't pay more for British goods if the American product is cheaper and just as good-looking.

Even if the manufacturer in England can please his American customer, he will have his troubles once his goods reach the United States.

British and other foreign exporters have complained for years that American customs officials seem to want to keep foreign goods out. Whether or not the charge is justified, exporters find the red tape of American customs maddening. The customs regulations, the product of congressional action twenty or more years ago, strike foreign exporters as arbitrary, inconsistent and beyond all reason in the risks they involve.

As matters stand today, many a foreign exporter has spent money to produce goods specially for American tastes, only to have them turned back at the ports because of some customs technicality.

The United States Government indicated, at last week's talks with the British and Canadian ministers, that it would go to Congress next year if necessary to get the

Last year's holiday shoppers stand entranced before a toy display in the window of an F st. department store. Can Britain achieve such smart styling and packaging and such low-pricing, that by Christmas of next year Washington crowds will be sweeping the shelves of imported goods? Acheson-Johnson 'Feud' Discounted, Although They Do Often Disagree

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

WHENEVER persons in the public eye issue statements denying that differences exist between them, the usual reaction is raised eyebrows. Be the principals Hollywood soulmates, a famed sports or theater duo, down-to-earth political bedfellows or two statesmen who have been pulling together, the normal feeling is:

"Where there's smoke there's fire. When they deny it, it must be so."

No moral condemnation is implied in such statements. The public attitude is that no two persons would admit they were feuding while they were trying to patch up things. Confessing a row is admitting that they have already broken up. So a nice white lie is in order.

Tito Clash Reported

THIS rather curious but accepted custom of our times makes it necessary to look further into the reported rift between Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson. According to reports, President Truman "talked like a Dutch uncle" to the two after a Cabinet meeting at which they tangled.

Johnson and Acheson are supposed to have disagreed about: (1) Shipment of a steel mill to Yugoslavia to aid Tito in his fight with Stalin; (2) our Spanish policy; (3) what to do about China; (4) National Security Council discussions about how to fight Russia.

A real rift between the two most important members of the Truman Cabinet could have far-reaching consequences. There are many historic analogies. Hamilton and Jefferson's split in the Washington Administration. The Stanton-Seward row in Civil War days. And the Hull-Morgenthau, Ickes-Hopkins and Woodring-versus-much-of-the-Cabinet disputes in pre-World War II days.

Is a repetition of such top level rows now breeding?

Secretary Johnson twice this month has issued an emphatic no to this question.

On September 7, NBC Commentator Richard Harkness asked him about the alleged row.

"I'm glad you asked that question," answered Johnson. "I continually see cock-eyed reports—and I describe them as cock-eyed reports—about a feud between Secretary Acheson and myself. There is not, and there has never been, a word of truth in it."

Johnson went on to say that on the steel mill for Tito matter the Pentagon's Munitions Board had opposed the project before he took over as Secretary of Defense. After investigating, he continued, he approved the transfer plan with the understanding that the whole matter will be reviewed before its actual shipment a year from now.

The Defense Secretary told Harkness that he and the Secretary of State never have had "any serious disagreement about any other matter." The two, he said, respect each other's opinions and settle differences "sitting down at the table together." Never, went on Johnson, have such differences had to be resolved either by the Security Council or the President.

Confirmed by 'Neutrals'

LAST SUNDAY, Representative O'Hara of Illinois asked Johnson a similar question. Heaping praise on Acheson, the Defense Secretary said:

"When Dean and I disagree, as we sometimes do, we sit down and out of the talks there comes agreement. The stories in the press that we have had these fights that threaten the integrity of the Administration are utterly without foundation."

Such affirmations from Johnson are reassuring, but the question remains whether he is denying only that "a feud exists" or whether there are lesser differences of importance. A West Virginian's definition of a feud might differ from that of a New Yorker.

It seems safe to conclude, however, after a careful examination of the facts, that there is no real split between the two officials. Those close to both Acheson and Johnson, and others at State and the Pentagon who owe neither any special loyalty, insist this is so. They declare that the differences of opinion between them have been greatly exaggerated and that what little incompatibility exists should be of no interest to the Nation.

Jap Scrap Recalled

ACHESON and Johnson have disagreed on several points of cold war strategy. But both State and Pentagon sources say these were differences between Department of State and Department of Defense thinking and general attitude rather than personal rifts between the two men. They point out that the diplomats and the military historically have been at variance on international power politics.

The Pentagon's reluctance to help arm a potential enemy by selling him a steel mill parallels the prewar Army-Navy opposition to shipping scrap steel to Japan. Military men don't want to send anyone anything that might come back in the form of bullets. The State Department, on the other hand, necessarily must take a broader viewpoint on such questions.

This basic difference in approach to cold war problems was even more evident when George Marshall was Secretary of State and James Forrestal, Secretary of Defense. Yet no one ever suggested they were "feuding."

It is a fact that there is less friction between the State Department and the Pentagon at various levels below the top today than a year ago. Almost everyone agrees that the details of the Atlantic Pact and Western European Military Aid Program were negotiated with a minimum of friction and with State officials in full control of policy.

Opposite Personalities

NO ONE, however, will dispute the fact that Acheson and Johnson have had their differences in Cabinet and Security Council sessions. These clashes have been due to several factors:

(1) Both men are very able, articulate and on top of their jobs.

(2) The aforementioned "ideological" difference in approach of the military and diplomats to cold war problems.

(3) The differences in temperament and personalities between the two men. Acheson is calm, analytical and something of an intellectual. He thinks more in terms of issues than personalities and has no discernible personal political ambitions.

Johnson, on the other hand, is impetuous. He has a natural assertiveness and willingness to state his views on any subject. He like to dominate any gathering. Moreover, he is an ambitious man and feels that if he makes a success of his present job he'll be a good presidential prospect in 1952.

Further, Louis Johnson is a smart, practical product of West-by-God-Virginia and the American Legion school of politics. Groton-educated Acheson, son of a Church of England dominie, might well not always talk the same language with such a colleague.

Both Corporation Lawyers

HOWEVER, such possible differences in temperament and approach easily can be overemphasized. Of far more importance are these key facts:

Both men agree on the same basic philosophy on international affairs. When Johnson was Assistant Secretary of War, fighting for military aid for Britain, Acheson was making speeches for the William Allen White Committee in the same cause. Today they largely see eye-to-eye on the fundamental approach to world problems.

Both have been corporation lawyers, representing big industry and wealthy clients, and are conservative in their views on domestic issues.

One top Government official gave this estimate of the relationship of the two men:

"Johnson is like the temperamental star halfback on the football team who thinks he can call the plays better than the quarterback, and wants to carry the ball himself most of the time. The quarterback—Acheson—has other ideas on gaining ground and keeps telling him to keep his shirt on. But, with it all, they're both on the same team and fighting to win the game together."

In short, say experienced Washington observers, the important thing is that Johnson and Acheson agree on fundamentals and most current issues, and their staffs get along. As long as they remain on formal, courteous relations, the question of whether they are personally congenial is relatively unimportant.

Potomac Oyster Navies Ready for 'War'

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

MARYLAND and Virginia crossed swords last week against a backdrop of tragedy in the 164th renewal of their perennial Potomac River "war."

The 1949 season began peacefully, however, with the only evident controversy a legal one.

A somber reminder that all is not well along the waterfront was the earlier death of 50-year-old Earl Nelson, a Crisfield, Md., crabber.

When Nelson was killed in Chesapeake Bay July 5 by a Virginia conservation officer, the situation was reversed in one respect:

The Old Dominion opened fire in the bay "war."

In the seasonal "oyster war" on the Potomac, the Free State has usually pulled the trigger.

Nelson's death was the result of an age-old boundary dispute in the middle of the Chesapeake, where Maryland and Virginia are divided by an imaginary line. "To each his own" is the law covering fishing rights in Chesapeake Bay. Virginia claimed Nelson crossed the State line to gather crabs.

Dredges Verboten

THE OYSTER problem in the briny waters of the Potomac is just as thorny, although no fatalities have been recorded in recent years. The question there is not so much where, as it is how, the seafood is taken in.

Rather than a mutually acceptable set of laws, the answer has more often been the rat-ta-tat-tat of submachine-gun fire.

The difference between a "dredge" and a "tong," in the minds of men who gather oysters for their keep, is the difference between eating and going hungry.

Maryland owns the once-rich oyster beds of the Potomac. Virginians are permitted to reap the harvest, beginning September 15. But it must be done with hand "tongs," and not with rake-like "dredges," says the conservation-wise Free State.

This year, Maryland has declared illegal the use of "patent" tongs. They are similar to hand tongs, but are operated mechanically on a special "rig" (like that used in dredging) equipped with a winch for hoisting the catch aboard.

Oystermen call hand tonging "grueling, back-breaking work." It's hardly worth the trouble, they say, because $15 to $25 worth of oysters a day per boat is considered a good catch.

24-Foot Handles

TONGS have handles as much as 24 feet in length. Three-inch tines, spaced three or four inches apart on a 24-inch shaft, are used for grappling.

The handles are operated until the tines become laden. The whole device, weighing between 30 and 50 pounds loaded, is then hauled into the boat.

A quarter of a bushel—with a few rocks included—for five minutes' work is a usual catch with this primitive method.

Dredging, on the other hand, takes little account of the water's depth. Under sail and in a good wind, the dredge can gather a dozen or more bushels an hour.

A catch of 25 bushels an hour is not unusual when the boat is driven by automotive power—but that's illegal, although not unheard of, both in the Potomac and in the Chesapeake, according to Maryland authorities.

Live ammunition has pierced the air in past seasons chiefly because oystermen have (1) used dredges in Potomac waters, or (2) gathered oysters at night, also illegal.

Some Maryland patrol boat skippers claim they have to shoot because violators outfit their boats with souped-up engines for a quick getaway.

This year, the Tidewater Fisheries Commission enforcement arm, commanded by Inspector John W. S. Foster, has 31 boats, an airplane and a roster of 80 men. Dedicated to "strict enforcement of the law" in Virginia are 40 men in 18 boats and a patrol plane.

'Treaty' Proposed

THE FREE STATE believes its Legislature came near untangling the legal knot this year in proposing a bi-State authority over the bay and river. Whether Virginia will follow suit in 1950 remains to be seen.

Legislation covering fishing rights between the two States antedates the British bombardment of Fort McHenry by some 30 years.

In 1785, the Virginia-Maryland Compact was signed. The Old Dominion controlled Cape Charles and Cape Henry, the entrance to the Chesapeake. All shipping paid toll, and Maryland had no access to the sea without enriching the coffers of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The compact prescirbed that Virginia would swap its control over the entrance for perpetual fishing rights in the Potomac.

The toll question was resolved four years later with ratification of the Federal Constitution, but Virginia kept her fishing rights—and Maryland kept jurisdiction over the Potomac.

As early as 1876, Governor Groome of Maryland complained to Governor Kemper

WORLD AFFAIRS

Italy's Modest Colonial Aims Have Little Chance

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

ROME.—At the far end of what Fascism vaingloriously called the Via dell' Impero—the Street of Empire—stands a vast, skeletal eight-story building. It is a modernistic, white cheeseblock set in the brown, mellow magnificence of the Colosseum, the triumphal arches of Titus and Constantine, the Forum and other relics of ancient Roman power.

The building was to have been the new Ministry of Colonies, Fascist administration center of an empire comprising Libya, Eritrea, Somaliland and the Dodecanese Islands, to which the Blackshirts had added Ethiopia and had hoped to add conquered parts of the British and French empires after World War II.

The building, however, remains unfinished, and in its square-holed ugliness symbolizes the tragedy of Fascist ambitions and the status of the problem of what is to be done about Italy's former colonies.

The question is on the agenda of the October 1 meeting of the U. N. Security Council at Lake Success, and is due to be taken up by the General Assembly before that. The problem will undoubtedly provide fresh fireworks in the West-East struggle over Europe.

The U. N. was to have settled the matter by February, 1948—a year after the signing of the Allied peace treaty with Italy—but failed in a fury of West-East disagreement. Little has happened since to encourage the hopes of Italians that a settlement can be reached now, and of others that the prestige of the U. N. might thus be elevated a notch or two in an important step toward overall peace.

On the contrary. The debate on the fate of the Italian colonies is more likely to produce new divisions among the Big Four. If the question is settled at all, it probably will be outside the U. N. and along strictly strategic lines conforming to the security interests of Britain and the United States rather than to the exigencies of Italian prestige or economics.

Pre-Fascist Acquisitions

ITALY, in the peace treaty, gave up sovereignty over all its colonial possessions, specifically Libya, Eritrea and Somaliland, although these were conquered or acquired by purchase before World War I and the Fascist era. Ethiopia was automatically restored to Emperor Haile Selassie with its liberation by British forces early in World War II. The Dodecanese, a constellation of some 50 islands in the Aegean, went to Greece in 1946, although they had been won from the Turks in 1912.

But Italy apparently had mental reservations about the pre-Fascist colonies when it signed the treaty, or hoped that its break with its German ally, its renunciation of Fascism and its cobelligerency would weigh in its favor when the fate of its former possessions was to be decided.

In addition to the colonies, the defeat cost Italy strips of territory along its northwestern frontier ceded to France, the agriculturally and industrially rich Venezia Giulia which went to Yugoslavia and Trieste, the latter now internationalized but still as Italian as Milan or Leghorn.

Until very recently, Italy had hoped that its pre-Fascist colonies would not be taken. It felt that it needed Tripolitania (Western Libya), Eritrea and Somaliland to: (1) serve as an outlet for surplus population, (2) expand both its markets and its sources of supply, (3) protect huge state and private investments in those colonies and (4) remain a Mediterranean power, albeit a third or fourth-rate one.

It had hoped to receive from its conquerors—Italy prefers to call them "cobelligerents" or "allies"—"utmost consideration" in the matter of colonies, not only in view of its wartime help toward Germany's defeat, but also because of its postwar loyalty to the West and its resistance to Communism. It also felt, rightly or wrongly, that it had been sufficiently punished for its Fascist aberration by loss of Venezia Giulia and beloved Trieste, focal point of Italian irridentism for a century.

Usually Absentee Control

BUT as time passed, Italy was to relearn what modern historians have known for a long time. This is that the Mediterranean, a strategic highway, has seldom been controlled by nations whose shores are washed by it but by distant great powers. Only Italy, in recent times, has ever come close to dominating The Med, which Mussolini liked to call Mare Nostrum but which was, in reality, a British sea.

For more than a century and a half, Britain ruled the Mediterranean from Gibraltar, Malta, Suez, the bases in Palestine and those in Egypt. Mussolini briefly challenged that rule in 1935-1936 during his Ethiopian war, and temporarily broke it completely in World War II when British naval traffic was obliged to shun The Med, and ply between Britain and its Commonwealth via the long, expensive, Cape route. Britain was obliged, for some time, to supply its armies in the Middle East via the back door of the Aden Straits and the Red Sea.

Now Britain, obliged to withdraw from Egypt by the terms of an old Anglo-Egyptian treaty and from Palestine by the Israelis, has no intention of ever allowing that to happen again. It believes that its own strategic and security needs in North Africa take precedence over any political or economic Italian considerations. It does not fear that Italy may once again be a major Mediterranean power, but it wants to make certain that neither Italy nor anyone else will again flank the Mediterranean seaway where it passes through the narrow waters between Sicily and North Africa.

It proposes to protect its Mediterranean shortcut by acquiring bases at such strategically located places as Tobruk, where much British blood was shed in the battle for Suez before America entered the war. It has already taken unilateral steps, but probably with American assent, to insure itself Cyrenaican bases by espousing the demands of the Senussi for independence. The Senussi were bloodily suppressed by the notorious General Graziani in Fascism's drive to "pacify" its East Libyan territory.

Britain's one-time position of power and prestige in The Med and among the Arab peoples has been substantially reduced. It is bent on regaining it if possible. Italy's political and economic needs will take second place in Britain's considerations.

Britain's strategic requirements coincide, moreover, with those of the United States, a newcomer to Mediterranean power politics but no less interested than Britain in keeping The Med open in peacetime and in its defense in wartime. Although the United States owns no Mediterranean real estate and holds no mandates or protectorates over any, it is at least as important a Mediterranean power today as Britain. An American, not a British, fleet patrols The Med's coveted waters as this is written.

The United States has supported and probably will continue to support a predominantly British solution of the Italian colonial question in the interests of security if for no other reason. For as long as the threat of war between West and East darkens the world scene, Britain and the United States will be obliged to pursue a policy of keeping Russia out of the Mediterranean, where for centuries the czars sought an outlet—an ambition reflected in postwar Soviet demands for bases at the Dardanelles and a U. N. trusteeship or a share therein in Libya.

But the United States, in supporting any solution of the problem which would exclude Italy completely from its former colonies, may find itself running headlong into economic inconsistencies and new political difficulties. Italy has cost the United States nearly three billion dollars in grants and loans intended to solve, among other things, this country's overpopulation and trade deficit problems.

A Subsidized Market

THE Italian colonies, particularly Libya and Eritrea, provided a large market for the products of Italian industry and served as an outlet for surplus population. The colonies were a liability on the state's books, but they were an asset from both a domestic and foreign trade standpoint. The colonies constituted for Italy a sort of private Marshall Plan—expensive to maintain but profitable tradewise.

Eritrea and Somaliland cost the Italian government, respectively, two billion dollars and 14 million dollars between 1913 and 1941, exclusive of military expenses. The bill for Libya for the same period was 159 million dollars. The sums cited went for public works and industrial and agricultural development. Private investments in the three colonies totaled $298,932,344.

Figures for the last prewar year, 1938, show that Eritrea and Somaliland imported from Italy 258 million dollars worth of automobiles, trucks, farm machinery and other manufactured goods. They exported to Italy nearly 40 million dollars in hides, cotton, bananas, coffee, minerals and other products, some of which were reexported to other nations for foreign exchange. Libya, in the same year, imported goods to the value of 40 million dollars and exported four million dollars in phosphates, tobacco, almonds and olives.

Trade between Italy and its former colonies was resumed last year, but it amounted to an insignificant fraction of the prewar volume. Italy, moreover, bought from the colonies several times more than it sold to them. The deficit balance merely increased Italy's overall deficit now being met by American taxpayers.

Recovery of a substantial portion of its colonial trade is one of the strongest motivations of Italy's desire to retain even a fraction of its former possessions. Another is overpopulation.

235,000 Italians Absorbed

LIBYA, which reaches from French Morocco to Egypt and comprises Tripolitania in the west, Cyrenaica in the east and Fezzan in the south, had absorbed some 130,000 Italian workers and might have taken up to 300,000 by 1941 had the war not intervened. Eritrea contained 75,000 Italians in 1941 and Somaliland 30,000.

Of the 235,000 Italians in the three colonies at the time of their liberation by the British, who now administer those areas through military government, 150,000 were evacuated to Italy. These cost Italy—and indirectly the American taxpayer—approximately 75 million dollars a year to feed and house in refugee camps.

Whatever policy the United States evolves or supports regarding disposal of the Italian colonies will probably take into account those economic facts. There are also political aspects to be considered.

Loudest supporters of total return of the colonies are the Communists. The Christian Democrat government of Premier Alcide De Gasperi is already under heavy Communist fire for having allegedly "given away" Trieste and Venezia Giulia. On this issue, the Communists are as rabidly nationalistic as the neo-Fascists of the Movimento Sociale Italiano, or a lot of other Italians of different political leanings, including many Christian Democrats. If the government is unable to salvage something fairly substantial from the colonial wreckage, it might be subjected to pressure it could not resist.

Only a small section of Italian public opinion, if the press and public speeches of the country's leaders are a measure thereof, is indifferent on the colonial question. There is a minority of professors, economists and intellectuals—progressives of the Liberal, Republican and right-wing Socialist parties—who feel that Italy might better build schools, roads, hospitals and aqueducts for its backward towns and villages than invest any more money in "colonial adventures."

Backs Native Aims

ITALY, however—and this is not generally realized by Italians, perhaps for the excellent reason that it has not been too widely publicized—has whittled its colonial pretensions down to very modest dimensions. Its experts recognize that no matter how much Italy might want its colonies, the native populations do not. At the U. N. where Italy is still not a member but only an observer, it will ask at most for a long-term trusteeship over relatively unimportant Somaliland.

As to Eritrea, most highly developed of the areas in dispute, Italy will support local polygot pleas for independence rather than accept proposed partition of the territory between the Negus and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Italy will also back up the demands of Libyan Arab communities for independence to be granted immediately rather than, as indicated in Italo-British conversations and previous U. N. debates, in five years or more.

Italy's chief concerns are (1) protection of existing investments, (2) restoration of trade and economic relations with its former colonies and (3) an outlet for excess workers. It is ready to accept any solution which will meet those objectives.

De Gasperi and Foreign Minister Count Sforza have repeatedly promised that the republic does not wish to attempt to play again the role of "imperial power." It could not if it wanted. Aside from the fact that old-fashioned colonialism is as outmoded as the mustache cup, Italy no longer has the armed forces with which to swashbuckle and is not likely to have ever again.

But even Italy's modest "demands" may prove too much to meet in the current struggle for power in the Mediterranean and Africa. Italy's case will probably be strongly supported by the French and by the South American republics. France, ruler of Arab populations, does not like to see Arab masses given independence wholesale.. The South Americans feel a "Latin kinship" for the Italians.

But Italy will also be backed up by the Soviet Union. That may be the kiss of death to Italian colonial aspirations.

Italy probably need never worry about having to finish its imposing Ministry of Colonies. It may even have to return the obelisk that now stands before the unfinished structure and that was pilfered from Axum, the Abyssinian Holy City, to grace a new Roman square commemorating Italy's African conquests. On the colonial issue, Italy may learn that losing wars is an expensive business.

Mussolini used Italy's African colonies to reduce the population surplus in the homeland. This 1938 photo shows Marshal Italo Balbo presenting keys for their new homes to colonists newly arrived at Cirene, Libya. Waiting for them were 75-acre farms, each with a tiny white house

GOP 'Individualist' Had Good Coaching

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

PENNSYLVANIA'S Edward Martin, who tossed the GOP presidential nomination to Governor Dewey in 1948, "coached" last week's GOP special election victory.

John P. Saylor, World War II naval lieutenant, ran as a Republican individualist who wore no man's collar.

But he listened to Senator Martin's advice.

Here are some Martin axioms used by Saylor in Pennsylvania's Twenty-sixth District House race:

Never mention the name of your opponent.

Stick to issues—let the other fellow do the smearing.

Don't spend campaign funds lavishly—it's usually sheer waste.

Use the kind of "guts" Bob Taft made famous—face every issue squarely.

Everything depends upon timing.

Let your campaign gather momentum "like an ocean wave." Reach the crest just before the vote.

After Saylor's sweep, Martin called the winning candidate to congratulate him, offered this further advice:

"Now you'll be hearing from a lot of people who didn't help you but say they did. Don't bawl them out. Thank them all cordially. You may get their help next time."

80 Seats Minus

REPUBLICANS needed the "lift" Saylor's win gave them. With the congressional elections a full year away, their drive for return to House and Senate control seemed more illusory than ever.

To take back the Senate they must hold all of their own seats, knock off seven Democrats. Right now, they can't count more than three or four Senate Democrats in serious trouble. They have that many or more soft spots of their own.

To organize the House, they need 47 seats. Their best chance lies in turnover districts where Democrats won in 1948 by a scant margin of 10,000 or less.

A statistics check shows there were 43 such districts. Catch is, there were 44 districts in which Republicans won by 10,000 or less.

So Republicans needed that booster shot. Pennsylvania's Twenty-sixth District victory gave them a new mathematical approach.

Here it is:

The GOP vote gain in Saylor's district was approximately 9 per cent over 1948 on the basis of the total vote cast. By applying that percentage increase to House districts held by Democrats, Republicans now say they can pick up 80 House seats.

There's only one thing wrong with that figuring. Mathematics is an exact science. Politics isn't.

Off the Record

FRIENDS and critics of Great Britain alike gave Foreign Minister Bevin a big hand when he lunched with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week.

One of the critics, Senate Republican Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.), arrived late. Sir Oliver Franks, the British Ambassador, was speaking. He seemed to be looking directly at Wherry as he spoke. He said Britain and the United States can resolve any differences "if we just sit down together and talk frankly."

Later, Foreign Relations Chairman Connally called on Wherry to say a few words.

"Sir Oliver was looking awfully hard at me," Wherry told the guests. "I just hope he knows I'm Wherry of Nebraska and not Kem of Missouri.

"I'm not the guy who made 'the British are coming' speech."

Wherry extended Bevin a "hearty welcome" and sat down. The ice was broken and good will prevailed.

What the British didn't know was why Wherry was late. He'd been held up by a Senate speech.

In the speech he ribbed Britain's Labor-Socialist government, said American venture capital wouldn't go to England "under the threat of socialization."

Texas Hospitality

A GAL REPORTER seeking "color" material modestly approached Senator Connally after the luncheon.

"Did Mr. Bevin enjoy his luncheon?" she asked Connally.

"He said he did," replied the puzzled Texan.

"Did he ask for a second helping?" she pressed.

"No," replied Connally. "Nobody got a second helping. We serve them aplenty the first time."

Budget Dudgeon

THE SENATE Appropriations Committee is on the warpath again.

The potent group, whose purse-string controls have rarely been challenged, is still grumbling over a recent ruling by Vice President Barkley.

Barkley ruled it had no authority to tie any legislative riders on appropriation bills and the Senate backed him up. The committee had to rewrite the foreign aid bill because of the ruling.

Seething members of the committee have even considered retaliation against other committees which helped clip their wings. If the Appropriations Committee in the future is limited to appropriations, then the big legislative committees should be just as strictly limited to legislation, they argue.

The first blow-up could come when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee calls up the military assistance bill this week. The bill carries a provision authorizing the RFC to advance 100 million dollars to get the arms aid program under way.

Some members of the Appropriations Committee contend the proviso is tantamount to an appropriation, which the Foreign Relations Committee has no authority to make. A point of order against the provision would land the dispute right back in Barkley's lap.

VICE PRESIDENT Barkley's reputation for salty humor, famous at the Capitol long before his election, has spread from coast to coast since. Recently several big time publications tried to coax him to tell some of his best yarns in print.

One offered him a four-figure sum just to relate 10 funny stories under his own signature.

The "Veep" turned down all the offers.

"If I published them, they just wouldn't be mine any more," he said.

Penang Demands British Status

PENANG, Malaya (AP).—The island paradise of Penang wants nothing better than to be alone.

The British, Chinese, Indian, Ceylonese and Eurasian leaders of Penang's economic and political life are vocal in their demands that the island secede from the Federation of Malaya and once again become a British crown colony.

The basic population of Penang is Chinese. The basic population of the Malayan Federation is Malay. Eighteen months ago Penang was removed by Britain from its colony called the Straits Settlements, which includes Singapore and Malacca. Penang was placed with its mainland frontal neighbor, Wellesley Province, into the newly formed Federation of Malaya.

The Malayan Federation is the British dream of "uniting and transferring rule" to the people of this British protectorate. First, however, there must be a real government to accept the new dominion status being planned.

Texan's Power Is a Memory

Politics Bypasses Gooseneck Bill

By Mack Williams

FORT WORTH.—The son of a slave who became a banker and a power in Texas politics is living out his days, wrapped in the luxuries of his fine Fort Worth home.

Fabulous "Gooseneck Bill" McDonald is 83 now, feeble and ill, and gone are the days when he enthralled Texas Negroes with his oratory and political know-how.

"I don't run the Republican Party and the Texas Negro Masonic Grand Lodge like I used to," William McDonald said dolefully from the four-poster bed to which he has been confined for 18 months.

A big diamond ring gleamed on a bony finger of his left hand and a silk robe hid the long, slender neck which the late Col. Bill Sterritt of the Dallas News, decades ago, had thought worthy of mention.

"He called me Gooseneck in a story and I never got away from it. Folks still call me Gooseneck."

McDonald's two-story home, framed by tall, white pillars and copied from the residence of the last man to own his father, was built about 45 years ago. That was during the time when Bill and Col. E. H. R. Green dominated the Texas Republicans.

Green was the son of Mrs. Hetty Green, eccentric New York multimillionaire and railroad owner who wore shabby clothes and pinched pennies. His mother sent him to Terrell to run her Midland Railroad.

McDonald had been sent to the old Wilberforce College in Nashville, Tenn., by Col. Jed Adams of Kaufman, Tex., and other white friends. When Bill met Green in Terrell, Tex., in 1896, McDonald was a rising young politician.

Negroes in Terrell and elsewhere in Texas were charmed by Gooseneck Bill's speeches. When Colonel Green decided to enter politics on a Republican "black and tan" platform, he chose Bill as his guide and paid him $575 a month.

Green and Gooseneck Bill survived political battles until 1912. In that year, their control of the Texas Republican Party was broken by "lily-whiters," who supported Cecil Lyons of Sherman.

Woodrow Wilson's election left bare pickings for the Republicans. Gooseneck Bill came to Fort Worth and founded the Fraternal Bank and Trust Co. It rapidly became a financial stronghold and depository for the State's Negro Masonic lodges.

Green and McDonald guessed wrong again in 1920, supporting Leonard Wood as the GOP nominee.

That ended much of Gooseneck Bill's influence. He veered to Al Smith in 1928 and backed Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Murray Stand on Wages Aids Pro-Commie Foes

THE WEEK IN HISTORY

By Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Pulitzer Prize Winning Historian and Associate Professor of History at Harvard

THE brief moment of calm brought to the steel industry by the report of the President's fact-finding board was abruptly shattered last week when United States Steel refused to accept the board's compromise formula as a basis for bargaining.

The board had rejected the steel workers' demand for a fourth-round wage increase on the ground that it would jeopardize national economic stability. But, at the same time, it had supported the demand for a company-financed pension and welfare system, arguing that such a system should be figured in as part of routine business costs, like allowances for wear and tear on machinery.

The United Steel Workers had accepted the board's recommendations. For the steel companies, however, their original jubilation over the elimination of the general wage increase had soon given way to dark second thoughts over the pension and welfare provisions. As United States Steel saw it, the noncontributory principle was "a revolutionary doctrine of far-reaching and serious consequences to the whole Nation."

The United States Steel decision to spurn the board's compromise seemed to make a strike highly probable at the expiration of the present truce, September 25. The Nation's press seemed to some observers more philosophical in face of the United States Steel action than it might have been had it been the union which refused the compromise.

Weapon Against Murray

IT WAS not yet clear what effect the steel formula would have on other negotiations, such as those between Ford and the United Auto Workers. But it was clear that Philip Murray's acceptance of the formula had intensified the fight in the CIO against the small minority of Communist-dominated unions. The pro-Communist leaders were quick to seize upon the relinquishment of the fourth round drive as a new pretext for their anti-Murray campaign.

Meanwhile, Alan Haywood, the CIO's director of organization, told the Communist-line leaders either to accept CIO policy "or get out." It looked as if the pro-Communists were beginning to prepare for just that eventuality by exploring the possibility of an alliance with their onetime friend, John L. Lewis, who shared their opposition to responsible labor leaders of the Murray type. Edwin S. Smith, former pro-Communist member of the National Labor Relations Board, was dispatched to the coal fields to write a series of articles which sounded suspiciously like left-wing overtures to Lewis.

Other indications last week, however, were that the pro-Communist forces in America were losing ground fast. Henry Wallace turned down Vito Marcantonio's proposal that he should run against Herbert Lehman for the Senate in New York this fall, and both Wallace in New York and O. John Rogge at the "peace" conference in Mexico City inserted mild reproaches to the Soviet Union in the midst of their usual glamorous denunciation of United States policy.

At the same time, Jo Davidson, one of America's inveterate fellow travelers, turned up in Belgrade to make a bust of Tito, and another former fellow traveler group, headed by Jerome Davis and Louis Adamic, returned from a successful pilgrimage to Yugoslavia. It looked as if the "united front" liberals, whose single passion had been to work with the Communists, were growing tardily disturbed by the Soviet policy toward Tito and by the American Communist theory that only pro-Communists are entitled to civil liberties.

A Far East Solution

THE Anglo-American financial talks concluded in an atmosphere of unusual mutual confidence. Though the talks had failed to produce miracles, no one had expected them to, and the time gained would presumably go to working out a more comprehensive solution of Britain's dollar difficulties.

Such a solution, Washington observers believed, could lie only in the assumption by the United States to an increasing degree of British financial responsibilities in the Far East, especially in India. With an accelerated flow of American capital to the East helping to restore the international payments equilibrium, it might be possible to consider the plans for currency union now being developed within the State Department.

The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, in the meantime, brought new pressure on Britain to devalue the pound and reports persisted that some such action might be forthcoming.

The tragic death of Wiley B. Rutledge confronted President Truman with a new Supreme Court vacancy. Rutledge's sturdy opinions in defense of individual liberties, if cast in less eloquent rhetoric than those of the late Frank Murphy, often had a more solid foundation in the face of law and history; and the passing this summer of both men stripped the court of its two most unconditional champions of personal freedom.

The designation in Rutledge's place of the former New Deal stalwart, Judge Sherman Minton, was a gesture in the direction of satisfying both those who had demanded a liberal appointment and those who had called for a promotion from the lower courts.

Fourth Assembly

Only 'Leftovers' On U. N. Menu

By Francis W. Carpenter

Associated Press Staff Writer

NEW YORK.—The biggest job for the fourth United Nations Assembly will be to wind up old business. There is a good chance some lingering issues may be disposed of at this assembly.

That is the expressed aim of Brig. Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine delegate who will be elected president of the Assembly—barring an upset. Romulo's backers say he has enough votes to elect him when the assembly convenes in the blue and gold meeting hall at Flushing Meadow Park Tuesday.

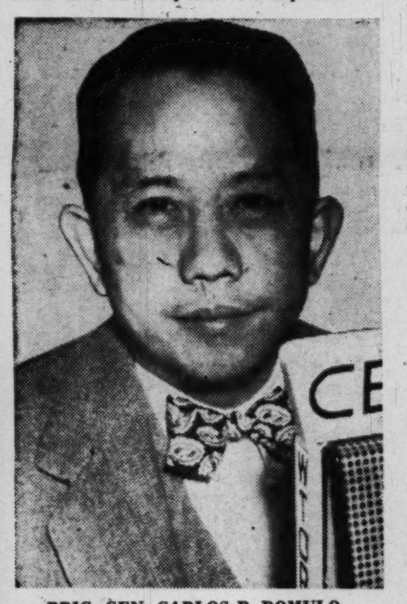
There are 14 old political problems inherited from previous assemblies, and some economic issues.

There is not one new major issue on the work sheet of 72 items, but there still is room for some countries to pull surprises. That is a favorite trick of the Russians, who usually hold their fire until their chief delegate makes his first formal speech in general debate.

A brief run-over of the 14 points shows the following:

Palestine: The shooting has stopped but the peace has not been made, and there is no sign here it will be made soon. Emphasis has turned to an economic survey under Gordon R. Clapp, chairman of the board of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and on final disposition of Jerusalem. The fate of Jerusalem will be discussed at length.

New members: None in sight. The Soviet Union used its thirty-first veto September 7 to block Nepal. Russia told the Security Council she would agree to Nepal and 13 other applicants if all were admitted; but the United States, Britain, France, China and other Council members refused to accept what they called a "horse trade."



BRIG. GEN. CARLOS P. ROMULO
. . . Assembly's new president

The veto: Dr. Jose Arce, Argentina, wants a general conference of the nations to amend the U. N. Charter and eliminate the veto power. The feeling, however, is that the time has not come to change the Charter.

Italian colonies: The United States was reported to have agreed with Britain and France and other interested western countries on the following: Early independence for all of Libya, perhaps in two or three years; Italian trusteeship for Italian Somaliland; division of Eritrea between Ethiopia and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.

Indonesia: A round table conference on settlement of the Indonesian question is going on in Holland, so the problem will not generate much heat here unless that fails.

Balkans: Some influential delegates regard the Balkan case as ripe for a solution and they are trying to arrange it as a credit for the U. N.

Korea: The U. N. Commission on Korea reported failure of its efforts to unify north and south Korea. It expressed fears of a "barbarous civil war" as a result of the "hardening" relations between north and south Korea.

Atomic energy: The United States, Russia, Canada, China, France and Britain are holding secret talks in an effort to reach some agreement to end the long deadlock between East and West.

Conventional armaments: The Commission for Conventional Armaments approved over Soviet objections a plan for a world census of arms and armed forces. This is expected to win Assembly approval but will not be effective if the Russians do not cooperate.

Little Assembly: Boycotted by the Soviet bloc, the Little Assembly has carried on in committees. It decided to recommend that it be put on a permanent basis.

U. N. Field Service: This came up last year as a Lie proposal for a guard force. Several countries objected to a force for "Admiral Lie."

Human rights: The delegates are expected to take up again the issue of human rights involved in the cases of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary and of Protestant clergymen jailed in Bulgaria.

Southwest Africa: The Union of South Africa informed the U. N. Trusteeship Council on July 11, 1949, it would not send any further reports on the mandated territory of Southwest Africa.

'Welfare State' is a Cuss Word

Epithet Incenses Whitehall, But Poor Like Its Benefits

By Hal Cooper

Associated Press Staff Writer

LONDON.—When you say "welfare state" around here, smile. Because "welfare state" with a sneer is getting to be a political cuss word. There's a strong feeling about it in the high places of Whitehall.

Health Minister Aneurin Bevan, the No. 1 apostle of welfare in Britain, has denounced Tory critics of his work as "vermin."

Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, with an eye to dim-viewers in America, forthrightly declares: "The United States is just as much a welfare state as we are."

A Universal Trend

WHAT is a welfare state, anyway? The question came up recently in a House of Commons debate on Britain's economic affairs.

Some critics of the ruling Labor Party say Britain is trying to carry too big a load of social services. They say it is being too paternal to its poor at a time when it can't afford the price. They claim its program for nationalizing basic industries is fatal to productive enterprise.

But in the House of Commons debate—that was July 18—Bevin popped out with something most Americans hadn't thought of:

"This so-called welfare state has developed everywhere. The United States is as much a welfare state as we are—only it is in a different form.

"One of our difficulties in the balance of payments today is the fact that the United States, in carrying out its welfare policy, has given basic prices to agriculture."

Bevin meant that higher farm prices force Britain to dig deeper for the dollars to buy United States food and raw materials.

As further evidence that the United States itself is neck-deep in State welfare projects, Bevin cited its unemployment insurance plan, sick pay programs and President Truman's call for Congress to set up a national medical service.

Billions for Betterment

THE dictionary says welfare work is "organized community or corporate efforts for social betterment of a class or group." By that definition, the Labor Party certainly has created a welfare state. It is committed all the way to the social betterment of Britain's lower classes.

The Labor government will spend 468 million pounds ($1,872,000,000) in the year ending next March 31 on a national health service program designed primarily to guarantee first-class medical attention for the poor.

It will pay out 465 million pounds ($1,860,000,000) on food subsidies to keep prices within reach of the small wage earner.

It also will:

Grant 66,250,000 pounds (265 million dollars) to local authorities to build low-rent permanent, temporary and emergency housing.

Continue wartime rent controls.

Contribute 141 million pounds (544 million dollars) to a national insurance fund for the jobless.

Pay 60,236,000 pounds ($240,944,000) in family allowances (a family is entitled to $1 each week for each minor child after the first).

Spend 31 million pounds (124 million dollars) to keep milk cheap and distribute it free to school children.

The total outlay for health, insurance and old-age pensions during the year will be 628,146,000 pounds ($2,512,584,000). This is a jump of 131,776,000 pounds ($527,104,000) compared with the fiscal year which ended last March 31.

All But a Dime

TO raise the kind of money involved requires, naturally, the steepest of taxation in a nation of only 50 millions.

The basic British income tax rate is 45 per cent. A rising scale goes on up to the point where it takes all but sixpence (a dime) out of every pound ($4) earned by those in the top brackets.

The middle class and the rich find this galling. Industrialists ask why they should risk their capital when the rewards after taxes are so low.

To overcome that kind of thinking, the Labor Party can use its program of nationalization.

The British poor, in general, think the welfare state is a fine thing. It gives them free medical treatment, medicine, wigs, spectacles, false teeth and hearing aids. It gives them free orange juice and cod liver oil for their babies. It keeps their rent and food bills low.

Where's the good in nationalization?

The Labor Party has summed up its attitude on that question in its platform for the next general elections:

"The government must accept responsibility for economic planning for the nation as a whole. Controls over capital investment, distribution of industry, industrial building and foreign exchange will be required as permanent instruments."

Insurance Next

THE LABOR government, in four years of power, already has taken over the coal mines, gas works, electricity, railroads, canals, long-distance road transport, airlines, the Bank of England, the world-wide network of the Cable and Wireless Co.

It is now engaged in jamming through Parliament a bill to nationalize the cream of the iron and steel industry before the next elections, which must be held not later than August, 1950.

If reelected, the Labor platform says, the government will move in on sugar and cement. It will nationalize the kinds of insurance sold to working class families who pay their premiums by the week.

That's the welfare state, British model.

U. S. Pays Only Half as Much Per Capita for 'Betterment'

By Clarke Beach

Associated Press Staff Writer

MANY American politicians agree with British Foreign Secretary Bevin's remark that "The United States is as much a welfare state as we are." It is possible to some extent to size up the argument on a dollars-and-cents basis.

You find then that America is spending less, proportionately, on its welfare program than Britain. But the two programs are close parallels in all important respects except Britain's national health insurance plan.

Whether this means that the United States is becoming a "welfare state" depends on who's speaking.

To President Truman and his adherents, it's simply a matter of carrying out one purpose of the Constitution: "To promote the general welfare." To leading Republicans, like Senators Vandenberg and Taft, and to some Democrats, like former Secretary of State Byrnes, it's the gradual emergence of the "welfare state."

This group says that by giving more and larger welfare benefits, exercising more controls over business and continually raising taxes, incomes will be leveled. National production will decline, they hold, the Government will step into the breach, nationalizing industry, and then we will have statism, totalitarianism, an all-powerful central government.

$114 in Britain

HERE'S how "welfare-ism" in Britain and America stack up today:

These seven projects are the chief components of the British welfare program:

(1) Food subsidies, (2) low rent housing, (3) unemployment compensation, (4) cheap milk, free to school children, (5) pensions and national health insurance, (6) family allowances, providing $1 a week to all families for each child after the first, (7) national assistance, through which the Government this year is taking over all relief to indigent not cared for under the other plans—at a cost of 352 million dollars this year.

The cost of the British scheme is about $5,918,528,000 annually. As the population of the United Kingdom is 50 million, this makes the cost $113 per person each year.

Here are the United States projects which are parallel to the British, and the estimated cost of each for the fiscal year ending in 1950:

1. Food subsidies, including price support, soil conservation, exportation and domestic consumption payments and the Sugar Act, all totaling $1,394,000,000 annually.

2. Low rent housing, to cost about 413 million dollars a year.

3. Unemployment compensation, including railroad retirement and State payments, plus Federal payments for administrative costs—totaling $1,170,000,000 a year.

4. School lunches, 75 million dollars.

5. Pensions and health, including old age and survivors' insurance, railroad retirement, veterans' medical care and Federal public health work—$2,414,900,000.

6. Public assistance, roughly approximating the family allowance and national assistance programs of the British. It includes $1,064,000,000 of Federal grants to the States for the needy aged, the blind and dependent children; 930 million dollars spent by the States to match Federal grants, and 264 million dollars in general relief provided entirely by the States. The total is $2,258,000,000.

ECA in 'Welfare'

THE total cost of the American welfare scheme is $7,724,900,000. With our population of 150 million, the per capita annual cost is $51—somewhat less than half what the median Britisher pays.

This leaves out some relatively small welfare projects in both countries.

Perhaps a welfare project list also should include the cost of our veterans' readjustment program—$2,301,000,000. Then there is the international welfare program, ECA, which costs almost six billion dollars a year; and the proposed aid to underdeveloped countries.

We would have to spend almost 17 billion dollars a year on welfare programs to bring our per capita costs up to those of the British. Republicans argue that adoption of the Administration's health insurance program and the Brannan farm plan would put us well over that.

Senator Taft says the Brannan plan would cost six billion dollars yearly. The Administration figures its health plan also would cost six billion dollars a year.

(The British health program is operated at an annual cost of $1,872,000,000—slightly less per capita than our proposed plan would cost.)

77 Percent Top

TO pay for their program, the British have to dig much deeper into their pockets than we do. Their basic income tax rate is 45 percent. Taxpayers in the top bracket pay all but 10 cents out of every $4. The United States basic income tax rate is 16.6 percent. No one pays more than 77 percent of his income in income taxes.

Administration leaders accuse their opponents of criticizing only those welfare measures and systems of Federal control which do not please them. They say, for instance, that if food subsidies are to be listed among welfare programs, many other subsidies designed to aid business rather than the farmer should be included. They cite Maritime Commission subsidies of about 37 million dollars annually to ship operators and builders and aviation subsidies of 300 million dollars a year.

About half the air mail subsidy, however, is only a reasonable payment for air mail transportation. Federal expenditures on aviation facilities are large national defense items.

They cite indirect subsidies which result in reduced Treasury revenues although no Government payment is involved. These include protective tariffs which benefit particular interests; reduced rates on water transportation by Government-operated carriers; low interest rates or waiver of interest on certain loans; low rates for certain classes of mail; and the relatively low grazing fees on Federal land.

A Checkrein

THE men who fear that the trend in America is toward a "welfare state" do not generally propose abandonment of any of the existing subsidies and welfare programs. They simply caution against any further steps in that direction. They quote a sentence attributed to the apostle of communism, Lenin: "Some day we shall force the United States to spend itself into destruction."

The reply of Senator Pepper, a leading Administration spokesman on the subject, is that our welfare program is an essential safeguard of our democracy. He says that if "statism" ever develops in the United States it will be primarily through the growth of uncontrolled monopoly by big business, forcing the little man into economic slavery.

Shoe Nails Are Dangerous

'Powder Keg' Crews Walk Softly

By William Peart

McALESTER, Okla.—Work at the sprawling United States naval ammunition depot near McAlester can be embarrassing. Like the time a shipment of shells and powder from the South Pacific was unpacked for testing, reloading and storage.

A grim looking sack—bulging to capacity—was in the load. The workers carted it to the testing area and opened it cautiously.

But it wouldn't explode.

"And no wonder," says Capt. V. R. Roane, the commanding officer. "It was just plain sweet—a hundred pound sack of sugar."

The folks who work at the base figure it's something like moving about a kitchen with a jealous cake in the oven—easy does it.

It isn't the work that's easy. They say easy is the only way to approach it because this is a base where tons of explosives are poured carefully into shells which are then stacked in storage magazines.

THIS is a naval base where a match found on a worker means automatic and immediate dismissal. It's a place where special rubber-soled shoes are regulation foot dress. Even the occasional visitor escorted around the five production areas has to tuck his feet into a pair of roomy canvas slippers—gliders, the Navy calls them.

That's because shoe nails are apt to cause a spark. And a spark could leap from one stray grain of powder and then to another and then . . .

Well, it doesn't take much of an imagination to know what would happen.

In sections of the base where there are railroad tracks, gleaming metal lightning rods line the tracks and reach toward the sky. It's in those areas the cars are pushed when the weather is threatening.

The ammunition depot at McAlester is one of four across the country. The others are at Hastings, Nebr.; Crane, Ind., and Hawthorne, Nev.

There are more than 2000 storage magazines over this base, which occupies an area more than twice the size of New York City's Manhattan Island.

Most of the magazines look like igloos covered with grass. They pock the countryside something like the pattern of a polka dot tie. And in them are the Navy's various sized shells—including rockets and depth bombs and mines.

The magazines' temperatures are kept at about 80 degrees. That's so the powder in the shells won't break down during long storage.

To do its job here, the Navy employs some 1400 civilian employes. In peak production—during World War II—8700 was the top figure. There are about 164 officers and enlisted men still on the base. There have been as many as 1270.

A December, 1944, magazine explosion has been the only one on the base. But that one—it's cause still isn't known—killed 11 persons.

Pinup Girls Are Passe

Fairy Princes Wear Grime

By Richard Kasischke

PRAGUE.—No more pinup girls for the soldiers. No more fairy tale princes for the children. Czechoslovakia has new heroes.

These are the workers, especially "shock workers," who produce above their daily quotas.

Fairy tales were counted out by the chief of a state editorial board which prepared new textbooks for the new school year. He declared, "Our youth is to form a permanent outlook on life according to the Marxist-Leninist teachings."

Pinup girls were banned by the army newspaper Obrana Lidu, which asserted, "The bathing beauty can be a model for American and British soldiers but not for Czech soldiers of the people's democratic army. They should decorate their barracks with slogans and pictures of shock workers."

This country doesn't lack for shock-worker heroes. They are hailed frequently in the press.

Some of the stories sound intriguing. Take the case of 19-year-old Zdenek Slama, a wire-coil attendant in the Prague Krizik plant, which manufactures cables and wires. His story was told in Mlada Fronta, organ of the Czechoslovak Youth Front.

One Friday, said Mlada Fronta, Slama announced to his department chief he wanted to dedicate his work on Saturday to "world democratic youth." He also wanted to make it a real tribute by "boosting my daily work quota to 300 per cent."

The department chief accepted, and on Saturday morning the factory loudspeaker system announced that Slama was out to set a record.

"He began at 0700," Mlada Front reported, "and by 0930 he already was going at a 250 per cent rate. The chairman of the factory committee rushed downstairs to the loudspeaker to announce this. But before he got there his news was already obsolete and he had to go back, because Slama had hit 300 per cent of quota. Then he set out to break the record of a shock worker champion of Brno. Two minutes before the end of his shift he did it—up to 555 per cent of quota.

"But," added Mlada Fronta, "This was not the end of Slama's day's work. Within a half hour of finishing his factory work he was speeding out to the country to lend a hand with a volunteer harvest brigade."

Slama then sent a telegram to Prime Minister Antonin Zapotocky declaring that he aimed to convert all the workers in his factory into shock workers.

On another recent day, Mlada Fronta reported that "certain reactionaries" in the factories were painting on machines and restroom walls such slogans as: "Death to shock workers; hang the shock workers."

44 New Brady Plates 'Rare Find'

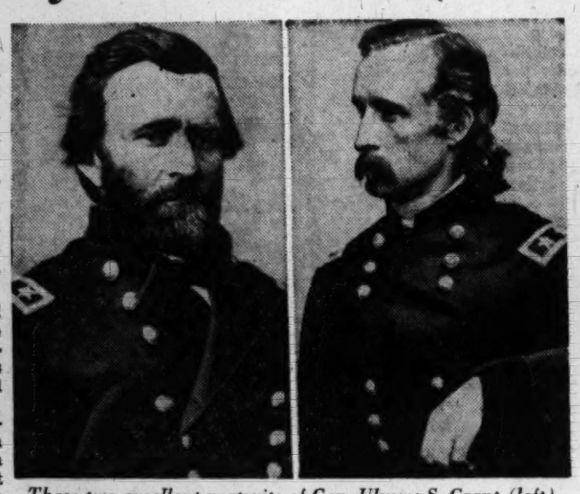
By Irving Desfor

Associated Press Staff Writer

BINGHAMTON, N. Y. — An Owego, N. Y., barn . . . Civil War Washington . . . and hidden treasure don't seem to have much in common. But because George L. Andrews, former District Attorney of Tioga County, N. Y., recently discovered 44 original Mathew Brady negatives in his Owego barn attic, the combination makes sense.

Mathew Brady was the famed Civil War photographer whose pioneering coverage of the battlefronts made him this country's first combat photographer and photo historian.

The treasure angle was confirmed when the Ansco division of the General Aniline & Film Corp. of Binghamton bought these original glass plates for a goodly sum, they say, though the exact figure was not announced.



These two excellent portraits of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant (left) and Gen. George A. Custer were made from Mathew Brady negatives found in George Andrews' barn

Sparkling Prints

THE 44 negatives include such famous Americans as President Ulysses S. Grant; Civil War Generals George Armstrong Custer, Philip H. Sheridan, Winfield S. Hancock and John A. Logan; Edwin M. Stanton, Lincoln's Secretary of War; Hamilton Fish, Grant's Secretary of State; James G. Blaine, Secretary of State under Garfield and Harrison and a five-time candidate for the presidency.

The glass plates, wrapped in Washington, D. C., newspapers dated 1866 and packed in wooden boxes, were in an excellent state of preservation. They produced brilliant, sparkling prints that confirmed Brady's reputation as an outstanding photographic craftsman. The portraits, made with primitive apparatus and lighting facilities, rival any produced today with the most modern outfits.

A few of these pictures, particularly of Grant and Custer (famous for his "last stand"), are said to be new and hitherto unpublished. Frederick H. Meserve, New York authority and owner of the largest private Brady collection, appraised the 44 negatives as a "rare find.".

"It is a matter of pure chance—and luck," he added, "that the barn in which they were stored was just the ideal place for their preservation."

Attic-cleaning Andrews found the negatives among his mother's effects. She had inherited them from the widow of Andrew Burgess, a noted gunsmith, who bought and operated Brady's National Photograph Gallery in Washington.

Brady 'Directed'

THE find focuses attention once more on some interesting angles of the Mathew Brady story.

First, the tremendous number of "Brady photos" that exist. He didn't take all of them himself. They are the combined results of the many studios, assistants and expeditions which he set up, employed and financed after his early personal succes. They are his planning and directing.

Due to his imagination and ability, the country has an accurate picture of the period's top personalities and vital struggle through the collections of:

The National Archives, with a select group of about 5000 original negatives;

The Library of Congress, with about 6000 negatives;

The Handy collection (Mrs. Brady was a Handy), with about 1500;

The Frederick Meserve private collection of almost 15,000 Brady originals gathered in 50 years as a collector.

These are the major collections. Other originals, in smaller numbers, are in some historical societies and museums.

Despite his world-wide fame and initial success, Mathew Brady died broke and penniless in 1896. He never recouped the fortune he invested in the "dark wagons" he sent out, equipped for on-the-scene wet plate making at the Civil War battlefronts.

Britain Must Tempt U. S. Shoppers

rules changed. In this way and in others the United States is now committed to help Britain earn her way in the American market.

A Matter of Lemons

BUT the Administration will not find it easy or painless to live up to its commitment. On the very day when American, British and Canadian ministers sat down to discuss the British dollar shortage, the two Senators from Arizona, Carl Hayden and Ernest MacFarland, went to the White House to see President Truman.

Arizona is a good Democratic State whose spokesmen in Congress usually go down the line for the foreign policy of the Administration. But Arizona also happens to grow lemons.

Its lemon growers had heard rumors that the tariff on lemons might be cut by reciprocal agreement with other countries. So the two Senators had to tell the President that the United States already grows more lemons than it consumes, and that a cut in the tariff would hurt the lemon growers.

Their visit was only a faint foretaste of the pressures that will surely be brought on the Administration, inside and outside Congress, if British or other foreign goods begin competing seriously with home products.

The British are oddly confident that they can penetrate the American market in spite of all the hazards of politics, tariffs and fickle tastes. Their market surveys make them believe they can at least double their present United Kingdom sales to the United States, which have been running at about 16 million dollars a month, not counting the far larger dollar receipts from raw materials, like rubber and tin, from the colonial empire.

Some of the increased sales, the British believe, can come from linen goods, especially since there is no American linen industry to worry them. They hope for other increases in woolens and worsteds, if they can produce the right styling; in motorcycles, bicycles and motor scooters; in automobiles, machinery, shoes and other leather goods.

They even feel confident that they can pick up a few million extra dollars from gift-shop novelties, which already produce 400 thousand dollars a month for the British dollar reserves.

Shipping Is Gold Mine

IF BRITAIN depended on direct sales of merchandise to the United States, the pessimists about the British future would have good reason for their gloom. Fortunately Britain has other sources of dollar earnings which are far bigger, and probably capable of far more growth, than linen or leather or gimcracks.

One of these is shipping, which is expected to earn more than 100 million pounds' worth of foreign exchange this year, much of it in dollars from the North Atlantic freight and passenger trade. The figure is limited today partly by the number of prewar British ships that now lie at the bottom of the sea, and partly by the difficulty of getting enough raw materials since the end of the war to build new ones.

Another handicap has been the clause in the ECA legislation that half of Marshall Plan goods coming from the United States must be carried in American ships. The three governments agreed the other day to study and review the position of British shipping—meaning, presumably, the restrictions now put on the British freedom to earn dollars with their ships.

There is little chance, however, that this Congress or the next will rescind the 50-50 provision. The ECA tried to do it by administrative order, and promptly ran into such a storm of protest that it had to backtrack.

The combination of shipowners and maritime union workers, aided and encouraged by the defense departments, probably makes more noise in proportion to its size than any lobby on Capitol Hill. The British can expect no relief from this quarter, and the realists among them know it.

Small Hotels Bypassed

ANOTHER big source of dollar earnings is the expenditures of American tourists, which are classed as an American import from Britain.

This year tourism is expected to bring Britain 50 million pounds, and will be one of Britain's biggest dollar-earners. Its growth this year has been hampered chiefly by the lack of shipping and airplane space in the summer months, but there is plenty of room for improvement in Britain itself. Much has been done to modernize the medium-sized, medium-priced hotels. Much more can be done to attract American visitors to them.

As it is today, the American tourist tends to concentrate in the bigger and fancier hotels; he leaves the little ones to the British vacationer who has no dollars to spend.

Most fruitful of all as sources of dollar income are the raw materials produced in the British colonial empire — among them rubber and tin in Malaya and cocoa in West Africa. The British government is preparing to spend 400 million pounds on the development of colonial resources. The World Bank announced only last week that it was considering a small dollar loan to the British Colonial Development Corp. to help step up the production of dollar-earning raw materials.

The chief threat to the British in this field is the development of synthetic substitutes rather than any American unwillingness to buy. Synthetic rubber has already dealt a crippling blow to natural rubber from Malaya. Synthetic oil from coal is already being produced for very little more than the cost of natural petroleum. Nylon is invading fields where cotton was once unchallenged. Unless the British get a good head start in some new synthetic products, their trade in the United States in many fields may always be at the mercy of American laboratories.

British officials concede that it will be a long, hard pull before their country earns as many dollars as it must spend. They regard the export drive in the United States as only the first and most obvious of many things they must do. In trying to sell their goods here, in the face of so many hazards, the British are gambling for high stakes. They have no assurance of winning, but they are ready to take the chance.

Medical Near-Misses

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK.—In 1908 a German chemist made a new chemical, then stuck it away in a laboratory safe. It lay gathering dust for 25 years, until in 1933 another German scientist took a look at it. Two years later he announced discovery of prontosil, first of the amazing sulfa drugs.

Prontosil was the chemical made in 1908.

It is one of the classics in stories of near-misses in medical research. By a hair's breadth, scientists have missed recognizing drugs that could have saved millions of lives if they had been put to use earlier.

Prontosil was one of the hundreds of chemicals made when Paul Ehrlich was seeking his magic bullets to kill germs. Why it was never put to a test is a mystery, Dr. Boris Sokoloff writes in a new book, "The Miracle Drugs" (Ziff-Davis Co.).

Rediscovered in 1935, prontosil was the springboard for chemical research that brought on sulfanilamide, sulfapyridine, sulfathiazole and other sulfa drugs that fought certain infections like no other drugs ever had. In World War II, the sulfa drugs were one of the reasons why 97.3 per cent of all wounded American servicemen survived.

Stimulus of War

SIR ALEXANDER FLEMING discovered penicillin in 1928. Mold spores floating in the air got onto agar plates on which he was growing bacteria. One mold produced this chemical that fought powerfully against the germs. He kept working at his discovery, but it attracted little attention.

It took a war to get penicillin born. Scientists took up the search that proved its usefulness, and made it possible to produce pure penicillin in huge quantities.

DDT has a Cinderella story, too. It was first made in Germany in 1874, but the chemist was looking for something else, and he shoved it aside. DDT wasn't rediscovered until 1939. It was 75 years late in being launched on its career against bugs. It could have been at work for years saving probably millions of lives from malaria, spread by mosquitoes.

There are Cinderella twists to other drugs too, says Dr. Archibald Scribner of Winthrop-Stearns, Inc., a drug house.

The Germans diligently sought new anti-malarial drugs before the war. They found some. But they threw aside one, now called aralen, that later turned out to be the most effective anti-malarial drug yet and the least toxic, he said.

Underrated 'Tonic'

NEW uses have been found for some old, familiar drugs. Veratum veride, used as a tonic in the old days, is now proving helpful in lowering blood pressure. Sulfamylon has been effective in treating ear infections and sinusitis. This was learned after it had been used for some time mainly as an antiseptic in wounds.

Novocaine has been used as a local anesthetic since 1905. Now its used in general anesthesia, and injections of it help some people with arthritis. It also is used to relax muscles in treating polio patients. So is curare, which South American Indians used for decades as a poison for their arrow tips.

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

WHEN not dwelling on the realities of the business cycle and devaluation, periodical fall fancies lightly turn to thoughts of fashion and football. Fashion at this time of year is news and, accordingly, invades the pages of Time and Quick.

"The New Look was already old hat," Time states. "The great wheel of fashion was turning onward from the bustling '90s to the tubular '20s." Helping to turn the wheel and, therefore, considered worthy of Time's cover is New York's highest paid ($40 an hour) model, Lisa Fonssagrives.

Time writes up Lisa and the modeling business in general. Lisa, it is pointed out, bears no relation to mortal women. She is there to persuade ordinary women that they will look as she looks in the same dress. She is an illusion that can sell not only clothes, but refrigerators, motor cars, bank loans and worthy causes. "She is the new Goddess of Plenty."

Quick features exclusive photos from its Paris office of such women as Lily Pons, Madeleine Carroll and Mrs. David Bruce. On the cover is Rita Hayworth, lucky possessor of Jacques Fath's latest as a maternity coat.

DAN TOPPING, coowner of the New York Yankees football and baseball teams, informed this department recently that women, if they tried, could become baseball experts. No matter what they will, there is apparently no way they can grasp the fine points of football.

Since some judgment must be exercised even to outline an article, I will just point out that Francis Wallace's Football Preview can be found in Collier's and Fred Russell's same in the Saturday Evening Post. Life salutes the season with a series of cartoons illustrating football rules by showing how they're broken.

LIFE also runs Evelyn Waugh, English novelist and Catholic convert, on "The American Epoch in the Catholic Church." Waugh's general thesis is that in every age some one branch of the church carries the main burden of responsibility and vitality. In this country, Waugh, who visited Catholic communities for four months last year, believes "Providence is schooling and strengthening a people for the historic destiny long borne by Europe."

In his usual semipatronizing, biting but brilliant manner, Waugh sketches his idea of the "America flavor" which he believes Europeans must watch because it is to predominate for two or three generations. Two chief impressions on which he expands are the great variety here, as in Europe, between the outward forms of Catholicism; and, second, that Catholicism is not something alien and opposed to the American spirit, but an essential part of it.

A WOMAN in the White House is advocated by Vincent Sheean in Look. The boys in the backroom might laugh, says Sheean, but every other cut-and-dried method of preserving peace, he believes, has failed. This symbolic act, he argues, might succeed.

Another feature of a superreadable issue is, "Were You Ever on the Brink of Death?," by Jack Winocour. He was in a transatlantic clipper with 60 other adults and 2 babies, when it developed engine trouble and descended 16,000 of its 19,000 feet before the pilot could level it out.

James Lawrence Fly, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, makes the case against wire tapping, Tim Cohane nominates Jackie Robinson ballplayer of the year, and Don Wharton writes on Harvard, "Aristocrat of American Universities," and of its place in our history.

NEVER underestimate the power of a box camera, warns Rus Arnold in U. S. Camera. The trouble with most snapshots, he lectures, is not the camera, but the person using it. Any limitations of the box camera can be resolved by remembering to use ortho film on sunny days; pan film when it's darker, and indoors a flash.

DON'T drift into any work, advises Kiplinger's Changing Times. Some fields are overcrowded. Ambitions are all very well, but if you want to eat it's helpful to consult the survey made by the Labor Department and the Veterans' Administration of the job outlook in some 288 occupations for which veterans are training. Some of it is summarized.

"GENTLEMAN of the Press," by George Frazier in Collier's, is the story of the Christian Science Monitor, the paper that devoted only three lines to this year's shooting of Eddie Waitkus, Philadelphia first baseman, and a minor place to the Lindbergh kidnaping. No smoking or noise is permitted in the city room. Despite, and because of all this, the Monitor is a successful newspaper and has even been called the country's best by some observers.

STEVEN M. SPENCER, in the Saturday Evening Post, brings us up to date in "Where Are We Now on Polio?" There's nothing startlingly new, but it's a conservatively done piece which seems to have tapped a number of outstanding sources. Ernest O. Hauser writes, "What's Happening to Germany's Jews?" It's sent from Frankfurt, traces several individual cases as well as trying to depict the general German attitude toward the Jews. "The composite picture is one of woeful confusion," the author reports.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

THE FIRST trade edition of 20,000 copies of "Call It Treason," the novel by George Howe that won the $15,000 Christophers' Award last April, is reported to be already sold out.

"Trade" edition has to be specified in this instance because the first edition consisted of 50 copies that Howe had mimeographed prior to publication to give to relatives and friends.

This is only one of the unusual things about the genesis of the novel by Howe, a quiet man with urbane eyes.

"Call It Treason" began as a short story that was never published. There the matter might have rested had it not been for an automobile accident that resulted in his being laid up in Emergency Hospital, which he praises for its "wonderful spirit."

During the months of leisure in the hospital, with one leg in traction and his jaw wired, he dictated the story into a sound recorder for two hours nightly. When it came time to transcribe the dictation, however, it was found that the stenographer had difficulty because of Howe's sometimes indistinct voice and the foreign words that occurred, so he ended by listening and repeating his own dictation to the stenographer.

11th-Hour Bobble

BECAUSE the manuscript was completed at the last moment, Howe took it to the Christophers' office in New York in person, arriving just before deadline. The office was filled with people bringing in manuscripts at the last moment.

Looking over his own manuscript before turning it in, Howe discovered several pages out of order. As he attempted to straighten them out, the onion skin leaves went cascading over the floor.

When Viking Press took the book, they asked for some revisions, to which Howe readily agreed. He took his advance royalty and went back to Germany to check his local color.

Howe found an American in the occupation zone who lived next to the father of the German youth who had become an American spy during the war and in the novel is given the fictitious name of "Karl Maurer." Howe also visited for the first time the spot in Bavaria which as a wartime OSS officer he had helped to pin-point for Karl to be parachuted.

Howe talked to a farmer there and asked him if American planes had passed over the area in wartime. The farmer recalled an incident on a certain night when an American plane was thought to have dropped someone, "but we never found the man." From the farmer's recollection of the date, Howe knew it was the flight which had dropped Karl.

Still Unsatisfied

HOWE believes his book won the prize "not because it was good writing, but because it was about a good kid—a tribute to a real man who lived," and would like to revise it again.

He believes the only reason the book got written was because while he was in the hospital he was able to shut out the world, something not easy when you are the father of four children, run a 250-acre farm in Maryland and practice architecture in Washington.

His father, Wallis Howe, incidentally is a well known Rhode Island architect who observed his eighty-first birthday Tuesday.

Howe, who wrote a novel, "Slaves Cottage," published about 15 years ago, has another one written several years ago that will be published one of these days.

Hex and Sex

MAYBE there still are witches in Pennsylvania. Henry W. Shoemaker, one of the authors of "Pennsylvania Songs and Legends" (University of Pennsylvania Press), tells of the beautiful blond from Clinton County who made a pass at a young fellow named Conrad recently. Conrad's mother said the girl was a witch, put a new broom under the steps the girl must cross and was vindicated when the girl died seven days later a wizened old woman sans teeth.

Dark Myths on the Debit Side

Balance Sheet on 20th Century

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY: A Midway Account of the Western World. By Hans Kohn. Macmillan. 242 pp. $2.50.

INCISIVE! Brilliant! Magnificently informed! It would be hard to find adjectives strong enough to praise Hans Kohn's midstream analysis of the turbulent twentieth century.

Seldom since the death of Thorstein Veblen has there been a writer so obviously capable of analyzing every significant aspect of the social order from the historical, sociological, economic and political points of view.

Where do we stand as we approach the halfway mark in a century which was ushered in with the ringing of bells and the joyous hope of a millennium of universal peace, freedom and prosperity?

On the credit side, says Kohn, are the facts that we are no longer naively certain of the natural goodness of mankind, or of the self-perpetuating inevitability of our political freedom. Still on the credit side is the fact that in our fight to smash fascism and national socialism we have revitalized democracy and learned the hard lesson that only by standing together in peace and in war can the peaceful and democratic nations hope to survive.

On the debit side are many black marks against our century. Foremost, perhaps, is the strength of several dark myths which still infect the minds of millions of men:

The Communist myth that only by bloody revolution in a continuous struggle between opposites can mankind hope for progress.

The racial myth that certain generic and ethnic stocks are superior to other "races."

The romantic myth that peace is cowardly, war is courageous, and that men "must live dangerously."

The isolationist myth that peace is divisible.

The totalitarian myth that because democracy of necessity entertains doubts and sponsors self-criticism, it is therefore decadent.

The evolutionary myth that "survival of the fittest" applies to the survival of whole societies.

The nationalist myth that mankind's first and highest loyalties are due his country right or wrong, rather than to the Brotherhood of Man.

Beginning and End

HANS KOHN does not discount the vast importance of prime movers like nationalism, socialism or even imperialism, taken in historical context. As his previous books have shown, he knows the natural history of all these movements back to their remote beginnings.

But to a far greater extent than most writers he has been able to graph the curves of such movements; show their youth, maturity and (in some cases) approaching senility. He is a remarkable diagnostician in revealing how the thinking of scientists and philosophers has been perverted by power-hungry tyrants eager to enslave and brutalize mankind.

As Kohn so ably demonstrates, the seeds of one century are largely sown in the preceding century. Thus, the flowering of American democracy in the nineteenth century is due not only to the remote well-springs of English democracy, but to the eighteenth century rationalists.

The twentieth century, in turn, is in part the unhappy product of Hegel's crude dialectic, inverted by Marx, perverted by Lenin and reduced to ultimate absurdity by Stalin. It is also the unhappy product of Schopenhauer's emphasis on "will" over intellect, which fed the flames of Wagner and Nietzsche, helped inspire German chauvinism and reached its ultimate corruption in Hitler.

Kohn assures us that only when intolerant statism is linked to intolerant mystical faith do we get potential aggression on the grand scale. Hitler linked these two forms of power in Germany. But Stalin links them even more securely in Russia.

As the author ably proves, Russia has felt for centuries that she is the propagator of the true faith—whether Eastern Orthodoxy or communism. Russia has willingly forgone the liberties of which she knows and cares so little for the tyranny of czar or dictator. The superficial westernization accomplished by a ruler like Peter the Great never went deep into the clod-bound, mystical masses who so far have seemed to be absolutely incapable of understanding Western values.

Short-Term Efficacy

ADD to this the dangerous fact that modern industrialization can be grafted onto almost any type of society, and you begin to get a picture of the blind Titan controlled through conspiracy and secret police whose massive and savage strength can be loosed from a virtually unassailable bastion (1) through actual aggressive warfare and (2) through the pseudo-science of Marxism with its dangerous appeal to all suppressed people everywhere.

But against the short-term efficacy of totalitarianism, Hans Kohn with surprising confidence opposes the long-term efficacy of democracy. He has for proof two world wars won by the democracies although they waited until the eleventh hour to arm. He has for further proof the fact that we are no longer asleep to the dangers of totalitarianism and already have begun arming militarily, spiritually and economically for the fray. He cites the Atlantic Pact and the strong urge toward Atlantic union as proof that democracy will survive in the second half of the twentieth century.

But we must be constantly vigilant. We must protect civil rights and liberties. The great tradition which came to us via Christianity, Greek philosophy, the Magna Carta, English common law, Locke, Hume, Rousseau, Jefferson and Lincoln must continue its tolerant, spirit-freeing course down the difficult ages. It must assure its continuance through a democratic world federation.

The alternative is victory for all the dark myths still alive in the world today. The alternative is a return to even darker ages than mankind has ever known; a midnight for which there would never be a dawn, since our rulers would have in their hands the atomic weapons and world-wide propaganda machines that could make our slavery permanent.

Doolittle Flier Is Disgusted

Bread and Butter Letter to Joe

By Sterling North

GUESTS OF THE KREMLIN. By Lieut. Col. Robert G. Emmens. Macmillan. 291 pp. $3.

"EVERYONE we saw, on and off the train, was in rags . . . Everyone, literally everyone, in every station we passed seemed to be a pauper . . . The children were most impressive. Bands of them dressed in absolute tatters, no shoes, and covered with filth . . . roved the railroad area and begged for food."

COL. EMMENS

Such, in brief, was Russia as seen by Robert G. Emmens and the four other members of the crew of the B-25 which took off from the Hornet with the other Doolittle bombers on that April day in 1942, dropped its explosives on Tokyo and ran out of gas over Siberia.

One can scarcely blame the Russians for interning the crew and assigning a staff to care for their needs. Russia was at peace with Japan and was taking from the advancing Germans a series of smashing defeats. A two-front war at that moment would have knocked Russia out of the conflict before America could bring her huge potential strength into the struggle.

But to the five young men being shunted here and there, first in Siberia, then in European Russia, growing hungrier and hungrier even on their admittedly "superior" Russian rations, the logic of the larger political considerations was all but lost.

What griped Emmens and his fellow fliers was the sinister air of conspiracy which enshrouded their treatment by the Reds during the entire 13 months of their internment. Secrecy, evasion, trickery, sly theft of their medical supplies and all but complete inattention to their frequent telegrams and letters marked the campaign of subtle torture which slowly drove the men to exasperation and inspired their final dramatic lunge for freedom in a midnight dash over the well-guarded frontier into Iran. (Or were the Communists, sub-rosa, collaborating on the escape?)

Old Women in Chains

COLONEL EMMENS obviously is not a trained reporter. But the patent honesty of his book speaks for itself.

Like so many other visitors to this "worker's Utopia," he was prepared to admire the vast social experiment about which he had heard glowing reports in his native Oregon. It is not surprising that what he observed turned his stomach and dissipated his sympathy.

"What we saw then, and many times thereafter, was a sight we will never forget. There was a group of about 15 old women trudging along in single file. They were chained together, and their clothing was filthy and ragged. Accompanying them were four guards all armed with rifles."

Not only cruelty, but senseless cruelty everywhere. Not only filth, but needless filth. Not only ignorance, but state-inspired ignorance. Fear in every face. Terror in every underling.

What Emmens reports is the outrage felt by a normal American boy brought face to face with a slave state, which seemed to him doubly insufferable because of the continuous propaganda which assured these half-starved citizens that theirs was the finest social system on earth.

There were individual Russians who were kind to the fliers. When big shots appeared, feasts of vodka and good food suddenly supplanted their black bread and cabbage diet. Once on a river boat they saw Russians relaxing, singing their songs and dancing their folks dances. A few times they were taken to excellent ballet performances.

But nine-tenths of their stay in Russia was marked by boredom, hunger and exasperation. Added to this, in Emmens' case, at least, was a growing sense of moral indignation that so many tens of millions of suffering people could be so callously abused and exploited for the power and luxury of the few.

Apologists will doubtless say that Russia was fighting a losing war for survival at that moment and did the best it could for five unwanted guests. But it is not the treatment of the fliers so much as the standard treatment of the citizenry that enrages the author.

Lenin to Wallace

HIS observations, of course, are neither new nor without great files of corroborating evidence.

On my Russian shelf are perhaps 50 volumes, covering every phase and political slant of the USSR from 1917 to 1949. They range from the writings of Lenin, Trotsky and Stalin through the starry-eyed innocence of "Soviet Communism," a two-volume panegyric by Sidney and Beatrice Webb, down to the latest embittered reports of Russians who have escaped from their national prison to the relative freedom of the outer world.

Among the most inane vaporings are the sentimental journeys of such men as Wallace and Steinbeck. Among the most thoughtful are studies of Russia by William Henry Chamberlain and the most recent books of Louis Fischer. In between lie dozens of more or less honest attempts to understand the great social revolution which has become the planet's most oppressive tyranny.

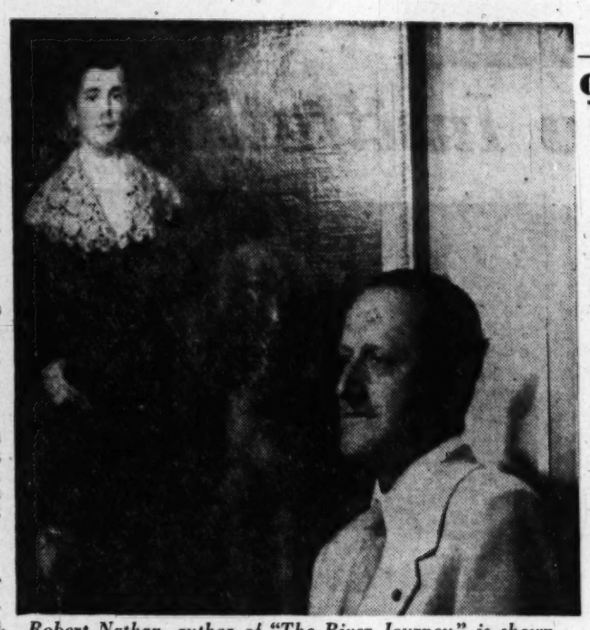
Looking over the shelf, I can see the increasing cynicism with which honest liberals have viewed communism down the years. Obviously there is no evidence of the state "withering away," no evidence of the "classless state." In these books, outbursts of "faith betrayed" mark each downward step—the state-induced starvation of millions of peasants during the '30s, the purge and execution of all whom Stalin could not dominate during the Moscow trials, the vicious opportunism of the Hitler-Stalin pact, and the ever-increasing arrogance from Yalta to the present day.

During the war, Russia was our ally. Millions of Americans tried to believe in her sincerity, struggled to excuse her political and social deficiencies.

But today, after nearly a third of a century of absolutism capped by betrayal of all her allies, only the most ignorant "idealists" or the paid agents of the Kremlin can possibly be influenced by the tortuous party line.

Robert G. Emmens, the ordinary American, saw Russia, learned to talk to Russians in their own language, feasted and starved with them, danced and sang with them, listened to their broadcasts, traveled in their filthy trains, used their excrement-defiled "plumbing," worked beside them in one of their pitiful factories, saw their slaves and their generals, and experienced their universal terror.

When he sees "communism, like a malignant scab on the skin of the world," spreading "north, south, east and west," he has two final words as to the treatment we must accord it—"FIGHT IT."



Robert Nathan, author of "The River Journey," is shown before a portrait of himself, of which he says: "I was about 6 at the time, and lived through the 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' period which so many of my generation had to go through"

Masterpiece of Brevity

Nathan Packs Lifetime Into 196 Tight Pages

THE RIVER JOURNEY. By Robert Nathan. Knopf. 196 pp. $2.50.

IF you are tired of three-pound, door-stopper historical novels and vast, wordy tomes on the evils of our atomic age, we suggest for a change a brief, bright and trenchant novelette which condenses a lifetime of observation into an evening of rewarding reading.

The cult of verbosity suffers from what the economists call "the law of diminishing returns." No wonder writers are losing their audiences. Rare is the writer who has more to say than could be condensed into 50,000 words. But rare is the egoist who will stop short of 200,000.

As H. L. Mencken once proclaimed, "It takes longer to write shorter books." While Ernest Hemingway added a truth he himself has since forgotten: "Good writing is architecture, not interior decoration."

Rewarding Thought

ROBERT Nathan's twenty-seventh novel is concerned with a contemporary journey of a middle-aged couple down the Missouri River on a houseboat. It also deals with such eternal verities as are to be discovered by a close analysis of life and death.

I find that in my library I have first editions of most of Robert Nathan's novels. I have been following his career since the publication of "Peter Kindred" (1919) and "Autumn" (1921). I have read and reviewed everything he has written in the last two decades.

And despite the fact that in essence he is always telling the same story, he never fails to reward his readers with some important new observation about our curious journey through life which makes all of our tragedies less tragic, our ecstacies more fraught with a sense of our mortality.

Nathan's novels might, as I have observed before, be charted in Hegelian terms. Thesis: Man wants but little here below. Antithesis: Those wants are usually denied. Synthesis: Somehow he finds provisional happiness despite the denial.

Journey of Life

AS in most Nathan novels, two frustrated souls start out on a journey together. In this case they are Minerva and Henry Parkinson of Steubenville on the Missouri River.

Minerva has just discovered that she has less than a year to live. She decides that without telling Henry of her plight she will give him the things he has always wanted. Perhaps after she is gone he will remember her more romantically.

So she cashes her small store of bonds, buys an old houseboat and refits it for a journey to New Orleans.

Henry, who has always dreamed of such a journey (as did Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn and millions of other boys), is shocked, pleased, surprised and frightened. But when a stranger named Mortimer and a girl called Nora join them on their odyssey, it becomes obvious that this is more than a river jaunt or a middle-aged honeymoon. It is the journey of life toward the vast sea beyond life. And the other name of Mr. Mortimer is Death.

The single line in this book which constitutes Robert Nathan's current philosophy seems to be spoken by a caged tiger with whom Minerva converses in a small river town near St. Louis: "Why look forward?" the great beast asks. "Look inward at the stars."

Brevity is still the soul of wit and the essence of story telling. What Conrad accomplished in "Youth" and Henry James in "The Turn of the Screw" can again be accomplished by modern writers if they have the discipline, courage and self-critical ability to write briefly. Mr. Nathan has made a bold and successful attempt to answer the cult of verbosity with a little masterpiece of tight-woven fiction. He deserves the support of the book-buying public.—S. N.

The Hoover Reports Boiled Down

By Jerry Kluttz

BIG GOVERNMENT. By Frank Gervasi. Whittlesey House. 336 pp. $4.

FRANK Gervasi has undertaken to solve a major national problem in his latest book—to write, in a mere 366 pages, what is wrong with the organization of our Government and what should be done about it.

GERVASI

Actually, his work is a condensation of the mountain of reports issued by the Hoover Commission, which spent a year making a detailed study on how the Government should be reorganized and made more effective at a lower cost. He does a good job in boiling them down to a concise and readable form and he spices up the voluminous facts and figures with his own observations.

"Big Government" will become an authoritative source for actions of the Hoover Commission. It is, in fact, a semiofficial document of the commission, since its staff gathered much of the material in it for the author. In his acknowledgements, Gervasi credits Charles B. Coates, the public relations director of the Hoover group, with being the "midwife of this little book."

The author approves wholeheartedly of the work of the Hoover Commission and he would use its recommendations to cure the ills of a big Government. He also is an admirer of former President Herbert C. Hoover and the way he handled his "final Government chore" as chairman of the reorganization commission. Gervasi writes:

"Whether all of its recommendations are carried out or not, it stands as a monument to Mr. Hoover's capacities as a former President and citizen. It can be said without hesitation that what Mr. Hoover failed to achieve as President—and he tried to reorganize Government several times during his Administration—he has certainly attained now. His place in history is assured. He has won, if the unanimously enthusiastic editorials in the country's newspapers are an indication, the gratitude and respect of the Nation—even of the men and women who reached maturity under the New Deal and have never known life in a Republican Administration."

Gervasi warmly applauds President Truman for having the foresight and the generosity to prevent the destruction of the Hoover Commision after his surprise reelection last November, and for placing some of its recommendations into effect. He believes that Mr. Truman's stature and prestige will grow as he carries out other suggestions for Government reforms made by the commission.

The odds, Gervasi believes, favor fulfillment of a substantial portion of the Hoover suggestions. He reveals, however, that Mr. Hoover is of the opinion that if only the suggestions for reforms in the budget and accounting methods of the Government were realized, along with changes in the personnel recruiting system to attract better people into the Federal structure, the commission's work would not have been in vain.

But those suggestions have stirred up heated and powerful opposition both within and without Government, and they will be the most difficult to accomplish.

The Triumph of Faith

A Parable About a Priest-Killer

THE EDGE OF DOOM. By Leo Brady. Dutton. 247 pp. $3.

"I didn't mean it, mother," Martin Lynn told her earnestly, kneeling by the dead woman's body. "I didn't mean any of it. You know I am a good boy . . . I wanted a nice funeral."

Because he wanted a nice funeral for the worn old woman who had had little from life except the comfort of religion, Martin had gone to the rectory fiercely determined to wring from the church the expensive funeral that he himself was not able to afford. But Father Kirkman was preoccupied, and his words did not satisfy Martin, and in his anguish and rebellion against the church Martin struck him with a crucifix and fled.

Wrong Crime

TWO other things happened that night. A theater cashier was robbed and shot, and a young priest of the parish returned to the rectory with Father Kirkman's orphan niece, Rita, whom he had retrieved just as she was about to be married in a civil ceremony.

Rita, too, was in rebellion against the church and the priest-uncle who always seemed to be interfering in her life.

It was irony that the police should first take notice of Martin as a possible suspect in the theater crime—Martin, who had never committed a crime before that at the rectory.

LEO BRADY

. . . Goldwyn bought it

The law was slow in closing in on Martin, slower than the net of such coincidences as that Martin's mother and Father Kirkman should both be lying in the same funeral parlor; slower in closing in than fear-ridden Martin, seeking expiation but unable to confess, wished.

Welcome Surrender

WHEN at last Rita the rebel came to him, warning him that the police would arrest him in a moment unless he fled, he said, "I'll welcome them . . . It's the only way . . . Nobody can resist forever."

Though he was speaking of the police, it was of the Church he was really speaking. Martin the rebel had returned to the fold.

Leo Brady, assistant professor of speech and drama at Catholic University, in this parable of the power of faith, which was purchased last spring by Sam Goldwyn following its entry in the Christophers' contest, has written a book that in success may be "The Miracle of the Bells" of the current publishing season.

Dolls, Not Babes

ACCORDING to Catherine Christopher's "The Complete Book of Doll Making and Collecting" (Greystone), the doll population of the United States now numbers well over 225 million. Obviously the author is really talking about dolls.

In a Nutshell

LOVELY LADY, PITY ME. By Roy Huggins. Duell, Sloan & Pearce, $2.50.

ANOTHER mystery billed as "a novel of suspense," this concerns the three loves—dead, desperate and doomed—of John Swanney, West Coast representative of a national news magazine. He's framed from the first word, although it takes a flashback to explain it, and he doesn't clear himself until the last page of the book. There's some hit-and-run detective work mixed in with a great deal of hare-and-hounds description before the chase ends according to script. Huggins actually does maintain suspense most of the way, but he'd better get Mr. Swanney back to reporting if he wants him to keep his job. The guy doesn't even carry a pencil.

CITIES OF THE DEEP. By Edward Lyons. Appleton, Century, Crofts. $3.50.

KIN is a half-wild boy embittered by his mother's bitterness and twisted by the scorn of the village. He sets forth to achieve the American Dream. From Waccamaw to New York is 1000 miles, and for Kin every mile is replete with suffering and adventure. In New York, merciless and unscrupulous, he goes on to fabulous success in Wall st. Eventually, it takes tragedy, debauchery and illness to teach Kin the hollowness of the material world he has built for himself. For sheer drama and story-telling ability, this first novel marks the author as one worth watching.

THE BEE HUNTER. By George Harold Edgell. Harvard. $2.50.

EDGELL is director of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and is the author of works about esthetics. But this book is about bees, or, rather, bee-trees, which have enchanted him since he was a boy in New Hampshire. He explains how to locate the one bee-tree on a wooded mountain with 10,000 trees, by making the bees themselves betray their hiding place. Sometimes he tags them by painting their tails—a job for a Spartan, certainly. It's an odd subject, but unexpectedly it proves as entertaining as a book about big game hunting.

THE MYSTERIOUS CABOOSE. By Mary Graham Bonner, Knopf. $2.

INTO this tale for and about youngsters, the author has worked many fictional matters which appeal to grownups: some boy-and-girl business, bravery and its reward, mystery and its solution, railroading, the Mounties, and adventure. Jock and Tom McNair rescue the daughter of a Canadian National Railways vice president from a runaway pony, and for their reward claim a ride in a caboose. That brings in a restaurant robber, and shows how brave boys must be bright boys, too. Illustrated.

THE WISE ONE. By Frank Conbear and J. L. Blundell. Sloane. $2.75.

THE life and death of a wise old beaver, as told by a Canadian trapper, Conbear. It isn't Ernest Thompson Seton (ask Dad) by any means, but the 25 black and white illustrations by Michael Bevans are stunning ones.

PREHISTORIC MAN: THE GREAT ADVENTURER. By Charles R. Knight. Appleton, Century, Crofts. $5.

THIS popularization features a series of pictures of our remote relatives by an American Museum of Natural History artist who specializes in recreating ancient man for the benefit of men today. Knight shows a profound understanding of Pithecanthropus Erectus and the Peking Man, and says that instead of despising them we should admire the vital spark which made them strive ceaselessly, exercise endless curiosity, face terrible climates and more terrible animals with calm courage and resourcefulness. The book avoids scientific jargon and detail, and make excellent reading.

THE SECOND CONFESSION, by Rex Stout. Viking. $2.50.

THERE are two shocking occurrences in "The Second Confession." Somebody literally shoots the daylights out of Nero Wolfe's orchid roof garden, and he is forced to disengage himself from his reinforced desk chair and make the terrifying journey from 35th st. to a country estate called Stony Acres. The case involves a millionaire's daughter who apparently has fallen in love with a possible Commie. Murder takes care of that part, but when the orchids get blasted, Wolfe really goes to work. Somewhere in the background is a mysterious character known as X, who remains in the background but shoves money at Nero by the peck. Wolfe has quite a bit of truck with the hierarchy of the American Communist Party before he gets his plant rooms repaired, prepaid, and solves the case, in that order. All told in Archie's cocky style, of course.

HAND ME A CRIME, by Charlotte Murray Russell. Crime Club-Doubleday. $2.25.

GUNS stolen from the post museum are used in two murders on a Midwest Army reservation. One victim is the general's brother-in-law, the other a strange woman. A couple of majors and even the general get more or less involved, the police fumble every play and a couple of women toy with the occult in a faint effort to get at the truth. But it takes the intuitive mind of Jane Amanda Edwards, spinster, to weave a noose for the killer out of this year's thinnest clew. The writing is the folksy, or tea party, kind that seems to be a hallmark of stories starring middle-aged lady sleuths.

THE STORY OF FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT. By Marcus Rosenblum. Simon & Schuster, $1.50.

AN INFORMAL, entertaining biography of the late President written for children. It contains 17 photographs and excellent drawings by Frances M. Ball in harmony with the text.

New Caldwell Novel Is His Masterpiece

PLACE CALLED ESTHERVILLE. By Erskine Caldwell. Duell, Sloan & Pearce. 244 pp. $2.75.

SUPPOSE it had happened in your own neighborhood! Suppose two attractive teen-age youngsters (mother dead, father unknown) had arrived to live with a crippled aunt.

Suppose that the girl, trying to earn an honest living as a housemaid, was raped by the husband of her first employer, swindled out of her wages by the chairman of the garden club who next employed her, attacked by a teen-age gang and ended up as an unmarried mother at the age of 18.

Suppose her brother, trying equally hard to earn a living and keep out of trouble, ran a similar gauntlet of blows from well-to-do adults and young hoodlums, loan sharks and employers, only to fall, victim of a brute who murdered for the sheer joy of killing.

Outraged? No American with the slightest sense of decency would tolerate such vicious treatment of young and unprotected citizens. Naturally the press, the pulpit and the officers of the law would rise in wrath and demand that justice be done.

Or would they?

The boy and girl, you see, were light-colored Negroes in a "Place Called Estherville"—a small town in the deep South. And in that whole community only one white citizen, the Christ-like and unforgettable Dr. Plowden, raised a single finger in their defense.

In this, his eleventh novel, Erskine Caldwell has probably written his masterpiece. It lacks the sardonic humor of "God's Little Acre." But in place of that earlier, almost playful approach to human degradation, it has the passion of true tragedy.—S. N.

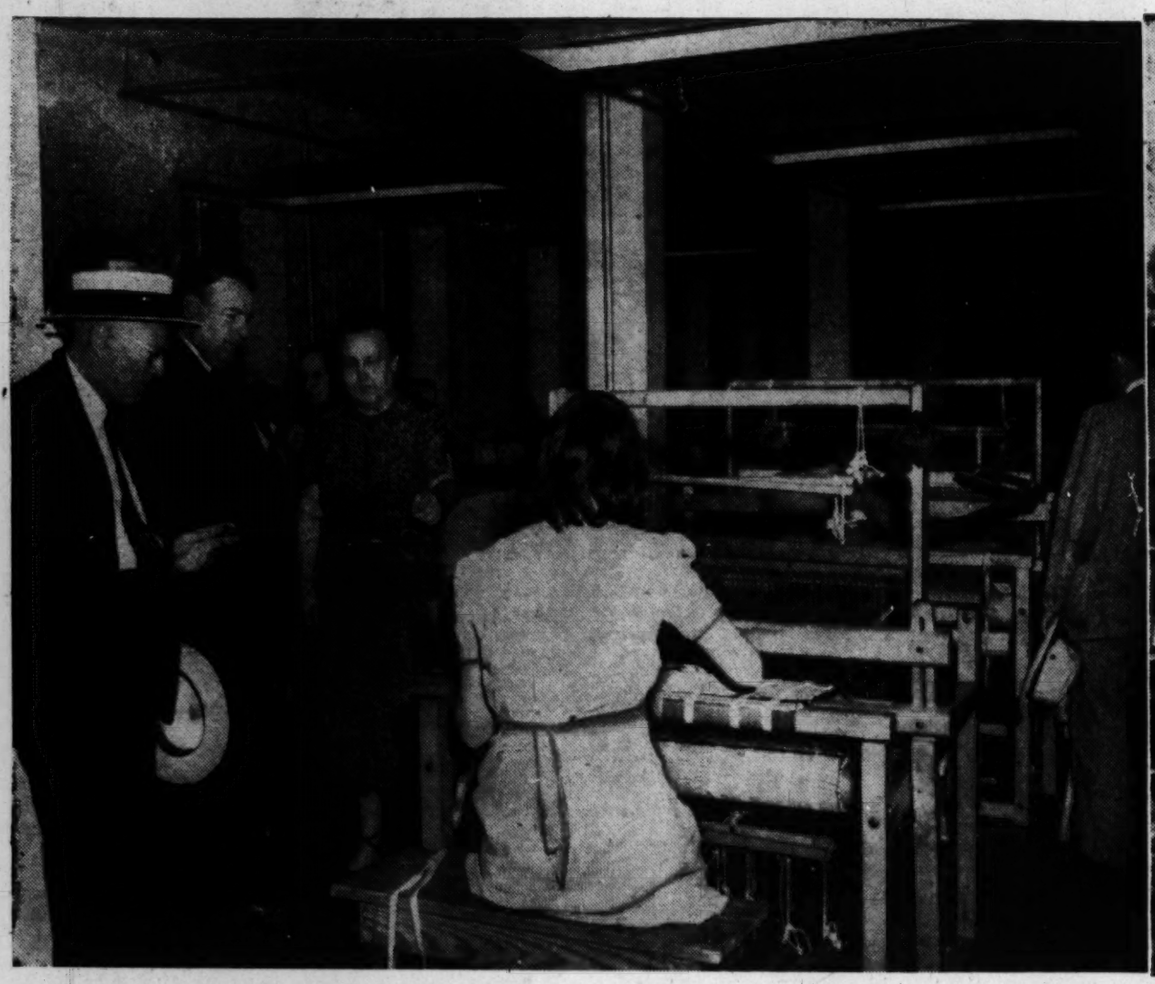
Gov. Tuck Finds Virginia Institutions Beehives of Construction



Governor Tuck (bareheaded) watches women prisoners make uniforms for the State Police in the clothing plant of the model State Industrial Farm for Women at Goochland. With him is Miss Elizabeth M. Kates, superintendent

By Benjamin Muse

Publisher, The Manassas Messenger

IN ADDITION to executing all the laws of the Commonwealth, the Governor of Virginia operates a half-billion-dollar plant. Accompanied by the lieutenant governor, the Speaker of the House of Delegates and the other members of the Advisory Council on the Budget, he has just been around to inspect it.

Half a billion dollars is a conservative estimate of the replacement value of all of Virginia's State-owned institutions, from prisons and hospitals to the University of Virginia, and this property is practically all paid for.

Of course, Virginia has been here a long time, and some of its institutions have been a-building for a century or two. The University, for instance, was established in 1819, and the government of Virginia was spending money on William and Mary as early as the seventeenth century. But the biggest part of the institutional plant has been erected within the memory of living Virginians.

The visits which ended yesterday constituted the biennial inspection tour of State institutions preparatory to formulation of the budget. What the Governor and his party saw was, above all, a vast picture of building activity. With $76 million of accumulated appropriations for construction, the State—following the wartime lag—is spending more on buildings for its institutions in the four years of the current biennium and the next biennium than it spent in several previous generations.

$3,000,000 Dormitory

THERE is hardly an institution that isn't building something, and new contracts are being let every few weeks. The University of Virginia opened bids for a $3 million dormitory and student activities building Friday.

Several institutions, like the Piedmont Sanatorium at Burkeville, have more building space under construction than in present use. Heavy construction is also under way at the Blue Ridge Sanatorium at Charlottesville, and the Catawba Sanatorium's building program will cost several million dollars. The State is moving vigorously to meet the mounting demand for hospital beds for tuberculosis patients.

The Eastern State Hospital at Williamsburg is being entirely rebuilt—over a 10-year period—at Dunbar, a few miles away. The Petersburg State Colony (for feebleminded Negroes) is being rebuilt on better farming land. The Lynchburg State Colony for mentally defective white patients is in the midst of a $3 million first installment of a $15 million program.

Projects totaling $4,917,464 have been completed in the past year, projects totaling $17,011,755 are in the working drawing stage and preliminary plans are now being drawn for another $18,042,000 worth of construction.

It is a good time, therefore, to take a look at the present half-billion-dollar plant.

Oddly enough, the State's biggest institutional jobs are the education of the mentally superior and the care of the mentally defective. The operation of Virginia's institutions of higher learning is costing the taxpayer more than $6,150,000 a year; providing for the 12,000 patients in Virginia's mental institutions is costing only about a half million dollars less.

Prisoners are more frugally provided for and they do a lot of valuable work, but the penal institutions are costing the State on balance about $1,800,000 a year. The annual bill for the operation of tuberculosis sanatoria comes to approximately $1,300,000.

Schools for the deaf and blind cost $460,000; schools for juvenile delinquents, $460,000; and the workshop for the blind at Charlottesville, $150,000.

In all, it is costing the State around 16 million dollars a year to run the institutions.

Of all the State's schools and colleges, the one most productive of genius per student and per tax dollar is the amazing little Virginia Military Institute—which, by the way, is a little bigger this year. The new barracks wing, which is being occupied now, will increase capacity from 750 to 1000 cadets.

Of VMI cadets who enter the Army, more go farther than of the same number of graduates of West Point. General Marshall and General Patton are illustrious exhibits. Yet VMI turns them out at less than one fourth of what is spent per cadet at the Military Academy.

William and Mary is on the crest of an unprecedented wave of popularity, a situation to which the restoration of Williamsburg, "The Common Glory" and 10 years of football success have all contributed. Since 1941 the college has grown from an enrollment of 1350 students at Williamsburg, 350 at Norfolk and 550 at Richmond to an estimated enrollment of 1900 students at Williamsburg, 850 at Norfolk and 1600 at Richmond—a total of 4350 students.

7000 Girls Enrolled

SPURRED by the demand for public school teachers, Virginia is now making generous provision for higher education for women. The teachers' colleges at Fredericksburg, Harrisonburg, Radford and Farmville, together with coeducational William and Mary and Central State College for Negroes, all together enroll about 7000 girls.

The teachers' colleges have taken fancy names in recent years, but they do a pretty economical job from the point of view both of the State and of the student. It is probably easier today for a Virginia girl of limited means to go to college than it is for a Virginia boy in similar circumstances.

The Medical College of Virginia, despite its $10 million group of buildings and its imposing skyscraper in Richmond, is woefully inadequate in the face of the shortage of physicians in Virginia and everywhere else. It can accommodate only 84 new students a year; there were 591 applications in 1948, and they are exceeding that number this year.

The racial inequalities in the Virginia public school system, to which the Federal courts have recently called embarrassing attention, are not apparent in the field of higher education. The State College for Negroes at Petersburg, with an enrollment this year of 1449 students, combines nearly the whole catalog of studies, activities and functions of the various white institutions of higher learning. It offers courses in the liberal arts, technology and teacher training, and operates an agricultural and home economics extension service. It has an outstanding music department, and its chorus is famous.

The State has a heavy investment in the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, but that institution provides a useful education to 4000 boys at minimum cost. It is in all respects the biggest of Virginia's institutions of higher learning.

The University of Virginia, however, with an only slightly smaller enrollment, is the richest. The $8 million it has received from the general fund for capital outlay since 1940 probably exceeds the total of all general fund appropriations to all Virginia institutions of higher learning for capital outlay in the previous century.

A Sad Comparison

BUT THE modest grandeur of Virginia's institutions of higher learning must be viewed this year against a background of desperate needs in the public school system. There are 1006 public schools in the State which have no indoor toilets.

Virginia stands near the top among the States in provision for higher learning; near the bottom in provision for public schools. For a State to operate two big liberal arts institutions is unusual, and a State-operated military institute is definitely anomalous.

Forty-two per cent of the students at the University last year were from outside of Virginia. The approximately 20 per cent at VPI and William and Mary is regarded as about the right proportion.

Virginia's ten institutions of higher learning are also too often rivals in the effort to become bigger and better. No common plan is followed in the allotment of courses, in the faculty salary scale or in other details in which savings might be effected. Running expenses per student vary fantastically. At VMI last year, it was $507; at the University, $255; at William and Mary, $200; and at VPI, $146.

Some colleges are overcrowded, while others, with less emphasis on glamor and promotion, have room to spare. Longwood, in spite of the loss by fire of one dormitory, could readily accommodate 100 more students this year.

Startling Differences

FOR THE mentally afflicted, the Western State Hospital at Marion, the Southeastern State Hospital at Staunton and the Eastern State Hospital at Williamsburg are dreary groups of great rambling old buildings set in campuslike enclosures. The DeJarnette Sanitarium at Staunton, a pay institution, occupies an attractive building in a resortlike setting. The Central State Hospital for Negroes at Petersburg has handsome modern buildings on landscaped grounds.

Despite the State's enormous appropriations for mental hospitals, however, the ideal in humane care and curative efforts is still far from being reached. An expanded curative program would undoubtedly reduce the size of appropriations which ultimately will be necessary to cope with an ever-increasing patient load.

Racial inequalities are not apparent in the institutional picture as a whole. The industrial school for wayward Negro girls at Peaks is a disgraceful affair, with 90 girls huddled in ramshackle wooden buildings which should long since have been replaced. On the other hand, the big, modern mental hospital for Negroes at Petersburg is the best of the State's institutions for the mentally afflicted.

It is largely a matter of which plant was erected last. In fact, construction now beginning at Peaks will give the Negro girls an institution superior to the not-too-good industrial school for 75 white girls at Bon Air.

Delinquent boys of both races are better housed than delinquent girls.

Virginia uses chains on some 1800 convicts. Let us say that and get it over.

The State's road workers sleep in temporary shelters and are chained at night. A score of the least trustworthy inmates at the Southampton Prison Farm are also chained at night.

After supper a shackle is fastened around the leg, above the ankle, and a small, 6-foot chain is fastened to the shackle. All the small chains on the prisoners in one hut are fastened by sliding rings to one heavy chain. Prisoners are able to move to and fro around the master chain.

Since the chaining permits outdoor work for prisoners who would otherwise be closely confined, it is less a hardship than a stigma. It is not what "chain gang" usually suggests. But it is bad.

The use of chains is an economy. The Division of Corrections has a program for eliminating chains by the construction of 30 permanent road camps at a total cost of about five million dollars. The first such camp has been erected at Culpeper, and funds have been provided for another. But at that rate chains will be a part of Virginia's penal system for many years to come.

There are a lot of good things about Virginia's penal system, however. At the very top of Virginia's institutions in excellence of plant and equipment is the State Industrial Farm for (242) Women at Goochland. Buildings and grounds are attractive. Interiors are bright and tidy, from the busy workshops to the very feminine cells. There are currently a dozen infants in the nursery—babies born to newly committed mothers.

It takes vastly more prison plants to accommodate the male criminals. There are about 1400 at the State Penitentiary at Richmond, 865 at the State Farm at Goochland and Powhatan, 115 at the Southhampton Farm and 50 in the embryonic farm for misdemeanants at Bland.

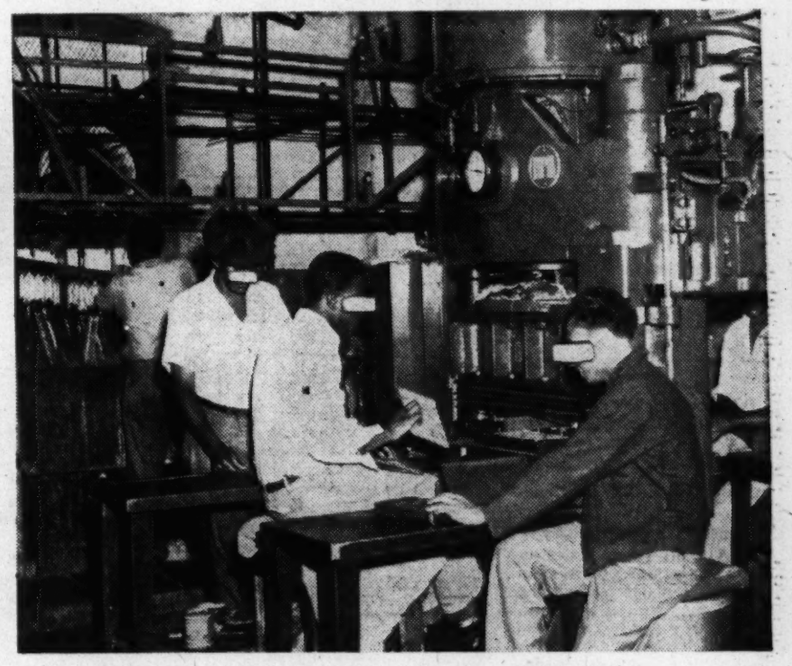
98 Per Cent 'Employed'

THE penal establishment is one big industrial plant. About 98 per cent of the 4500 convicts are kept busy at productive work.

Prisoners erect their own buildings and contribute to construction at other State institutions. They provide building materials, from bricks produced in the kilns at Goochland to locks and bars processed in the metals shop of the State Penitentiary.

Prisoners make road signs for the State Highway Department, auto tags for the Division of Motor Vehicles and furniture for many State institutions. They print many State publications, and the penitentiary has its own quarterly magazine.

There were many evidences of a need for better equipment and more personnel in the penal establishment, but much evidence at the same time of able efforts on the part of prison officials to make the most of what they have.



Prisoners in the metals shop of the State Penitentiary at Richmond stamp auto tags for the Divison of Motor Vehicles of Virginia that a wounded Marylander had been "driven by the wind and waves upon the Somerset shore" after an encounter with an "armed canoe," said to be commanded by a Virginia oyster inspector.

The Battle's Over Dredges

Legislative Badminton

THE CHESAPEAKE BAY was more a bone of contention between the two States than the Potomac until 1930, when Virginia passed a law prohibiting dredging in the river. Maryland followed suit in 1931, but in 1934 Virginia repealed her law and legalized power dredging. Maryland refused to concur.

Virginia enacted an even more specific law to permit certain types of power dredging in 1946—without concurrence by Maryland—and the breach was widened.

Some Old Dominion oystermen felt they were authorized to dredge. Free State oystermen couldn't understand why they were required to use tongs at the same time.

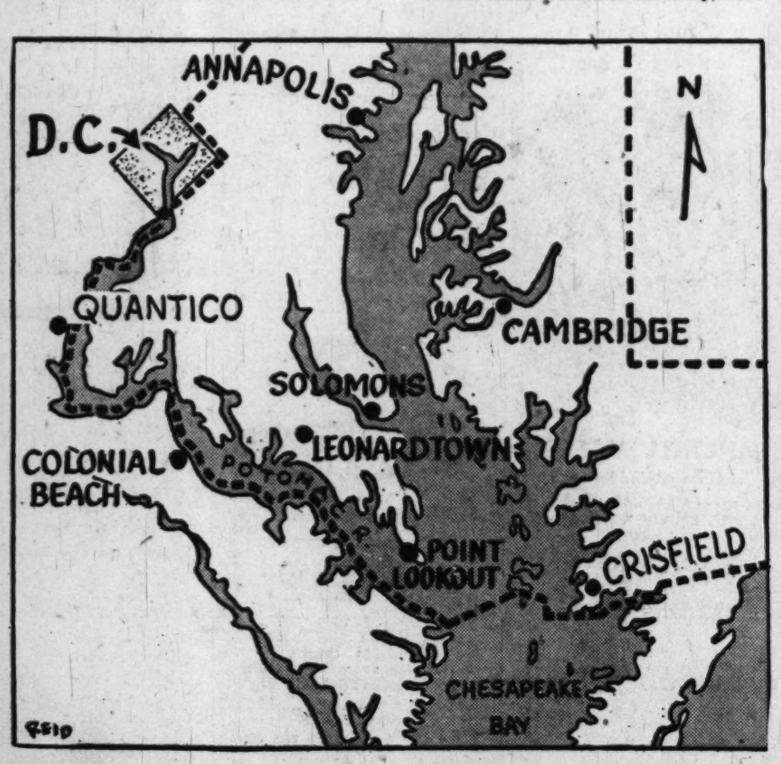
To further aggravate the touchy situation, Maryland set a precedent and tried three Virginia violators last January, sending them to prison. Virginia's Governor Tuck, however, finally conceded that the Free State had jurisdiction.

Oystermen who insist the Potomac oyster beds are more productive than those in the bay will continue to dredge on the theory that it's all right if you don't get caught. Meanwhile, they're looking to the Capitol at Richmond to see what the 1950 General Assembly will do.

No Unilateral Veto

THE MARYLAND General Assembly has passed unanimously a peace pact to amend the 1785 Compact, subject to approval by the Virginia Legislature and to ratification by Congress. It would set up a new Maryland-Virginia Chesapeake-Potomac Authority to regulate bi-State fisheries.

All conflicting State laws would be automatically repealed, and neither State, acting alone, could change the authority's rules.



The Maryland Tidewater Fisheries Department and the Virginia Commission of Fisheries would be responsible for enforcing the bi-State seafood laws.

The agency would consist of seven members—three from each State and the other appointed by the Governors, jointly, or by the President of the United States if they failed to agree.

It would be empowered to regulate and control fin fish and crabs in the Potomac and tidal waters of the bay and its tributaries in both States; fix the seasons; specify equipment; issue licenses; set limits on catches, and rehabilitate oyster production in the Potomac by establishing cull laws against taking undersized oysters, opening and closing oyster bars, licensing watermen and other means.

Governor Tuck has made it clear he prefers to consider the Potomac and the Chesapeake separately.

Virginia Fisheries Commissioner Charles M. Lankford said last week that his department won't draw up a bill establishing the joint authority.

"It's up to someone in the General Assembly," he said.

David H. Wallace, Maryland Commissioner of Tidewater Fisheries, says the proposal would at least provide "the possibility of uniform laws."

Here's How to See New York and Stay Solvent

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK (AP).—So you're coming to visit New York this summer for the first time?

And your ailing rich uncle hasn't died yet and left you his money, so you have to travel on your own skinny pocketbook? And you want to know whether anybody can come here and have fun on a small budget?

Brother, at least seven million of the people who live here will tell you "yes"—with some qualifications.

You can do it if you have a real curiosity to see and know as much as you can of this circus too big to put under canvas. But if your idea of heaven is to simper at gilded celebrities in plush supper clubs night after night—why, better wait until your uncle dies.

The best things in New York—its wonderful window displays, its famous streets, its great stores, its history-crowded museums, its skyscrapers, its tremendous views—cost little or nothing to see. And the people, the fabulous people of this fabulous city, they are the best show of all—and free.

But there is a time to see things best. Go at the right time for each.

Ageless Coney

GO OUT to Coney Island on a steaming Sunday and see humanity on the half shell. That is still the New York that O. Henry wrote about. And so are the Bowery and Chinatown—and the edge of Greenwich Village. It's best to see them at night, and the subway will take you to any of those places for a dime.

But let's start at the beginning. When you get off your train or bus, treat yourself to a cab ride to your hotel. If you don't know a good, clean reasonably priced one, ask the hackie. Unless you give him the idea you're just in from Fort Knox, Ky., he'll steer you straight.

Even though your budget is tight you can still work it so that you eat at least once in a big-name restaurant, see a Broadway play and take in a fine concert. Timing is important in these things too.

Go to the restaurant at lunch. The prices are usually scaled lower at mid-day—and you are just as likely to see a celebrity then. Hit the theater boxoffices half an hour before curtain time. At all except the top musicals or "Death of a Salesman" you'll probably be able to pick up a pair of tickets. "A Streetcar Named Desire" is now advertising good seats available for all performances, and my wife says it's the best play in town.

If you're a music lover, you can listen to some of the world's best talent at evening concerts under the stars at Lewisohn Stadium. And the prices, tax paid, range from 30 cents to $2. Major league baseball isn't too high. Go to see the Dodgers play at night—then you won't have to add the cost of a bottle of sunburn lotion to the price of your bleacher seat.

DON'T fail to go up to the top of the Empire State Building. Take a trip through Rockefeller Center. See the Rockettes in the Radio City Music Hall. Ride the ferry to Staten Island and enjoy the greatest view and the longest over-water ride on the globe for a nickel. All are good buys.

But walking and gawking are the finest fun here if your arches are strong. Stroll through the garment district any week day at noon; Wall Street, deserted on a Saturday afternoon; and Times Square on Saturday night, the biggest country town in America.

Be blase as you meander along Ritzy Park ave. Don't try to rescue a lady if she appears to be choking to death in a mink coat. She's happy—and what better way can a lady die. Once I saw a lady leading a deer along there and nobody turned to look twice. Should you see an octopus on Park Avenue leading Greta Garbo in chains, don't stare. Everybody'll know you're from out of town.

Two final important tips:

1. Don't change $2 (or $20) bills for strangers.
2. When in doubt about anything, ask a cop. If you can't understand him, ask again. He may be from Brooklyn.

West's Indian Rites Attract Tourists

Fiestas and dances during August and September will add flavor to the tourist calendar in New Mexico and Arizona. The three big attractions are the intertribal Indian ceremonies at Gallup, N. Mex., the Hopi snake dances in northern Arizona and the Santa Fe fiesta.

The ceremonies attract thousands of Indians from the Nation's tribes, and about 400 take an active part in them. Among those who will do so in the twenty-eighth annual gathering this year will be Navajos, Apaches and representatives of many of the pueblos of New Mexico and Arizona. Cheyennes from Montana and Caddos from Oklahoma will be guests of honor from afar. Santa Fe is always filled to capacity for the four-day fiesta, which has been held every year since 1712 and is the oldest community folk festival in the United States.

Tobacco Tours

Auctioneer's Chant Rends Virginia Air

VISITORS to Virginia this autumn are invited to watch tobacco auctions in action and listen at close range to the famed chant of the tobacco auctioneer by the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce.

The chamber is organizing tours of tobacco warehouses during sale hours through the cooperation of local chambers of commerce in marketing towns. The plan is being effected in Virginia's 10 Old Belt marts, 4 dark tobacco markets, and 1 sun-cured market and 1 burley market. Local chamber of commerce committees will provide well-informed guides to escort visitors on their tours.

The "Tobaccoland Tours" are a part of the chamber's over-all plan to provide more incumbents for tourists to visit the Old Dominion and to lengthen their stay in the State. Special information on tobacco growing, marketing and manufacturing is being prepared to give to visitors.

Old Belt Open

VIRGINIA'S Old Belt market, so called because tobacco culture in the region dates back to Colonial days, operates until mid-December. Market towns in this southern Virginia area are Danville, Martinsville, Rocky Mount, South Boston, Brookneal, Clarksville, Chase City, Kenbridge, South Hill, Lawrenceville and Petersburg. Tobacco sold on these markets is the "bright," or flue-cured, type.

The Virginia Fire-Cured markets are located in Bedford, Blackstone, Farmville and Lynchburg. The central Virginia marts open in mid-December, and specialize in a type used chiefly in snuff and export trade. This tobacco is commonly referred to as "dark-fired."

Abingdon, in the southwestern section of the State, is Virginia's only burley market. This type of tobacco is grown principally in Kentucky and is used in cigarettes and pipe mixtures. The market opens in January.

Sun-Cured Market

RICHMOND is reputed to be the only sun-cured tobacco market in the world. This highly specialized "sweet" type is used in chewing tobacco and is grown in several counties near the Virginia capital. Richmond also manufacturers more cigarettes than any other city in the world.

The sun-cured warehouses are located in Richmond's Shockoe Creek, near the site of William Byrd's trading post, which was the city's birthplace in colonial days. The sun-cured market opens in January.

Danville is rated as the world's second largest tobacco market. It has 12 warehouses and 4 "sets" of buyers, representing manufacturers, exporters and independent leaf companies.

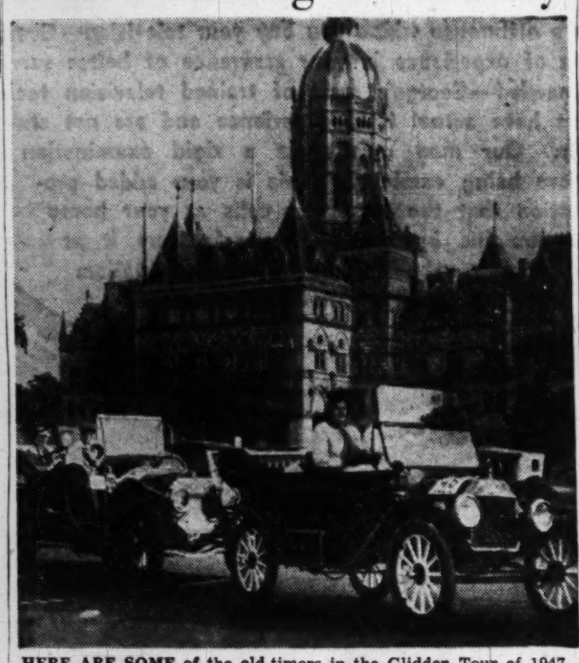
For many years, tobacco was Virginia's largest single source of agricultural income. Now, however, with diversified farming and crop rotation, dairy production ranks first.

Mojave Life Pageant

A pioneer pageant of life on the Mojave Desert of Southern California will be staged September 23 and 24 in Mule Canyon, a natural amphitheater near the "ghost town" of Calico, the area's All-Year Club reports. The vacation spot is near the desert town of Barstow.

Glidden Tour

Aged Autos to 'Scorch' Again In Tour Starting Next Sunday



HERE ARE SOME of the old-timers in the Glidden Tour of 1947, at Hartford, Conn., headed by a 1913 Ford

By Alexander R. George

AMERICA'S annual cavalcade of ancient automobiles will start chugging out of Gettysburg, Pa., next Sunday morning.

Some of the Nation's oldest gasoline buggies and "steam snorters" will be in the 1949 Glidden Tour. It's scheduled as a six-day, 650-mile trip describing a vast ring around the Nation's Capital through historic sections of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland and Delaware.

Among some 70 old-time cars will be a one-cylinder 1904 Cadillac runabout, several Stanley Steamers and "tin lizzies" of pre-World War I vintage with elegant, carriage-type kerosene headlamps. Also a 1907 Rolls-Royce owned by Opera Singer James Melton, a 1901 Oldsmobile and a 1910 American Underslung.

Awards will be given for the most interesting car, best one or two-cylinder car, best early four-cylinder car, best six-cylinder car, best Model T Ford, best steamer and car that has traveled longest distance from home.

Through 1924

CARS up to and including 1924 are allowed in the tour, but participants are encouraged to enter cars built before 1917. All cars must comply with home State safety regulations.

You never see an old wreck or even a shabby auto in the Glidden Tour. Owners of the most antiquated vehicles take pride in keeping them in good running condition, metal, wood and leather gleaming.

The Glidden Tour started back in 1905, ran until 1914 and was revived in 1946. It has been organized as a permanent event by M. J. Duryea, son of pioneer auto builder Charles E. Duryea.

The tour is being sponsored by the Antique Automobile Club of America, with the assistance of the American Automobile Association. Cars may be entered by members of the Antique Club and of the Veteran Motor Car Club and the Horseless Carriage Club.

Luray First Stop

THIS year's tour will proceed from Gettysburg to Luray, Va., then to Charlottesville, and the home of Thomas Jefferson. The next run will be to Richmond and from there to colonial Williamsburg.

Longest day's run will be 180 miles from Williamsburg to Annapolis, Md. From Annapolis the tourists will cross Chesapeake Bay by ferry and drive to Wilmington, Del., last point on the tour.

Charles S. Glidden, wealthy auto enthusiast of Boston, got up the tour to stimulate interest in motoring. The trip from New York City to Bretton Woods, N. H., and return was mostly over dirt roads, some of them deeply rutted.

The participants (33 started and 27 finished) were to decide who put on the best performance. It was reported that each entrant voted himself first but that Percy Pierce of Buffalo, driving his Pierce-Arrow, got the most second place votes and thus won the award.

Among the pioneer auto builders who made that first Glidden Tour were R. E. Olds, J. D. Maxwell and Alfred Pope of Pope-Toledo fame. Olds and seven other Glidden tourists were fined $15 for exceeding a 20-mile an hour limit outside Leicester, Mass.

Vacationers Are Too Often Spendthrifts

By Adelaide Kerr

NEW YORK, Sept. 17 (AP).—Now that your vacation is over would you say it was a real success? Was it worth what it cost? Did you really get what you wanted?

You didn't?

There are millions more just like you, says Elsie Stapleton, a family budget expert whose posthumous book, "Spending for Happiness," has just been published. Mrs. Stapleton, adviser to thousands of harassed householders, died in June.

Citing the experience of a lifetime, Mrs. Stapleton wrote that the money people spend for fun—including vacations—is more misspent than any other funds they lay out.

First secret of a successful vacation, said Mrs. Stapleton, is to start planning early. Take the whole family into the conclave. Think what you would really like and choose something that is fun, or relaxation for you. Because the Smiths like it is no sign you will.

Remember that a complete change of scene and some change of activity is a good tonic. (If you play bridge all winter, why play it all summer?) Two brothers and their families, neither one of whom was rich, solved the change-of-scene problem at very little cost, by changing homes for two weeks. Ed and his family visited Chicago, while Phil and his wife vacationed in a town near a State park, lush with forests and lakes.

Nobody Finer Than Justice of Carolina

With Shirley Povich

IN THE Duke game last year, North Carolina U.'s Tarheels and their 45,000 fans at Chapel Hill were in a sweat. Starting the third quarter, it was 0-0, and Carolina's expected invitation to the Sugar Bowl was in forfeit. Duke was bottling up Charlie (Choo-Choo) Justice.

POVICH

And then it happened. From Duke's 43-yard line Justice got the ball on a hand-off. He started around left end, was trapped, and averted a big loss behind the line by reversing his field. Sprinting toward the right sideline, he picked up ten yards, found himself hemmed in again. Dancing out of trouble, he reversed his field once more and skittered away from grasping hands.

Meanwhile, big Ted Hazzlewood, Carolina tackle, had pinned a Duke end with a ferocious block; in fact was sitting on him, in a scrimmage-line tableau.

"Lemme up," screamed the Duke man, "Justice passed here ten seconds ago."

"Nothing doing," said Hazlewood calmly. "You're staying down. I knoow Choo-Choo. He may be back this way two or three more times before this play is over."

Justice made it all the way. His 43-yard touchdown started Carolina on its way to a 20-0 victory. Carolina fans had seen their Choo-Choo break another game wide open with one of his climax sprints.

IF THERE HAS BEEN a more important citizen than Charlie Justice in Carolina the past three years, his fame has not come to light. Carolina is a State gone daft over the 165-pound Justice, the boy from Asheville, home-grown tailback of the Tar Heels.

The initial natural jealousy of Duke, Carolina State and Wake Forest, the other football powers of the State, has melted before the State-wide adulation of Choo-Choo.

At the end of last season, Justice's fame as a national football figure was secure. By whopping margins in the voting, he was selected on the All-American teams announced by both the Associated Press and United Press.

But Grantland Rice kicked up a storm in North Carolina, the equal of any that had ever assaulted Cape Hatteras. In his All-American selections for Colliers, Rice conceded Justice a berth only on the second team. Carolina citizens questioned Rice's sanity. Calmer heads were all for haling him before the Un-American Activities Committee on clear-cut evidence of treason.

Small wonder Carolina is nuts about Justice. Over a three-year span Choo-Choo has averaged a touchdown every thirteenth time he got his hands on the ball. Last season he shattered all known collegiate kicking records with his average of 44 yards flat on his punts, measured from the scrimmage line.

COACH WALLY BUTTS was warning his Georgia team about Justice last year. "Watch him close," he said. "He'll outrun you, outpass you and outkick you. He'll fake you out of your shoes in a broken field. Take no chances with Justice."

On the first of his three touchdowns against Georgia, Choo-Choo took a punt 84 yards, neatly faking the Georgia safety man out of his path as a final fillip.

Butts immediately yanked his safety man out of the game, and demanded: "What happened with you and Justice?"

The sheepish kid finally mustered an answer. "Coach, until a few minutes ago I didn't realize how smart you are."

Despite a disarming cowlick that falls over a boyish face, Charlie Justice is no kid as varsity football players are reckoned. He's 25, pushing 26, and an old hand at football. Four years at Asheville High, three with the crack Bainbridge Navy team and now four years at Carolina add up to 11 seasons of football for Justice.

Choo-Choo, given to reversing his fields, also has reversed the normal procedure of a football star. He's getting his college football degree after taking what amounted to a post-

New York, Sept. 17 (AP).—Joe Page, the peerless relief pitcher making his 53d appearance of the season,, saved another game for New York Yankees today as the Detroit Tigers were set down, 5-4.

George Vico and Pinch-Hitter Paul Campbell hit home runs on successive pitches in the seventh to knock Fred Sanford from the mound.

Page yielded a run in the eighth when Pat Mullin tripled and came home after Hoot Evers' long fly, but he saved the day in the ninth by forcing Johnny Lipon to hit into a double play that ended the game.

With both New York and Boston winning, the Yankees held their 2½-game lead in the American League, but time is running out on the Red Sox. The defeat was the fourth in a row for the Tigers after they had won 10 straight.

Charlie Keller sent New York ahead in the second with a homer after Joe DiMaggio doubled. The

Truman Sees Marines Beat V. P. I., 33-14

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Commander in Chief Harry Truman put his Quantico Marines squarely on the spot yesterday, making a surprise appearance at their game with V.P.I. in Alexandria.

With the President and Commandant Clifton B. Cates on hand, the Marines couldn't afford to lose. They didn't, crushing the collegians from Blacksburg, 33-14, for their twenty-sixth consecutive victory over a three-year span.

The distinguished guests joined the overflow crowd of 12,000 that enthusiastically welcomed big-time football to the 200-year-old city across the Potomac.

A host of good backs, good ends; in fact, good ballplayers personally saw to it that Quantico's streak remained intact. The ring leader was 165-pound Bennie Moore, Naval Academy alumnus, who runs with power of a 200-pounder.

Following his excellent example were Clint King, Rudy Flores, Dick Ambrogi, George Greco, Dolph Plank, Bob McElroy, Ed Leach and the rest.

Virginia Poly had nothing to be ashamed of, either. The plucky boys from Blacksburg rallied from a 20-0 deficit to make it a 20-14 ball game in the third period. They finally succumbed to too much manpower.

Soph Dick Goodman was the passing standout. He kept VPI in it with 15 completions in 22 tries. They were good for one touchdown and 155 yards. Speedy Sterling Wingo kept the Marines fidgety, too. He broke away for one 30-yard dash and made other menacing moves, but just couldn't go all the way.

Robinson Hits 18th Homer, But Tribe Clouts Nats, 8-3

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Lefty Gene Bearden, who outpitched Mickey Harris in Cleveland July 24, won his first game since then yesterday, beating Harris and the Nats, 8-3, before 7,147 at Griffith Stadium.

Except for Eddie Robinson's eighteenth home run in the third inning, it was a run of the mill loss for the Nats, who've dropped 96 this year.

Robbie's clout, a liner far over the rightfield wall, tied the record for lefthanded hitting Washington players in one season, Goose Goslin and Stan Spence having performed that feat before. Eddie still needs four more to tie the Nats record for all hitters, held by Zeke Bonura and Al Simmons.

Bearden got off to a shaky start, yielding all three Washington runs and six of their hits in the first three innings. But he tightened up after that and blanked the Nats with only two singles.

Led by Manager Lou Boudreau, with four singles, and Mickey Vernon and Ken Keltner, each with a Winner of the contest each week will be announced in Thursday's paper.

Yanks Win 6 Of 8 Matches In Singles

By Glenn Williams

Ganton, England, Sept. 17 (AP).—America's professional golfers crushed Britain's best club swingers in six out of eight singles matches today to come from behind to win the treasured Ryder Cup, 7-5.

Over 12,000 British spectators saw the one-sided trouncing of yesterday's four scotch foursomes.

The Americans have held the international trophy since 1935.

Lloyd Mangrum, the Chicago star, made the triumph official when, in the final match of the day, he defeated British match play champion, Fred Daly, 4 and 3.

The other Americans finished this way:

E. J. (Dutch) Harrison of Little Rock, Ark., buried Max Faulkner, 8 and 7, after having built up a seven-hole lead at lunch time.

Sammy Snead of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., trounced little Charlie Ward, 6 and 5.

Clayton Heafner of Charlotte, N. C., recovered from a one down deficit at noon to defeat Dick Burton, former British Open king, 3 and 2.

Chick Harbert of Detroit trimmed Sam King — the only Briton who won a match in the cup series at Portland, Oreg., two years ago—4 and 3.

Jimmy Demaret of Ojai, Calif., trounced Art Lees, 7 and 6, after having unloaded a 68 on his morning round to take a five up lead.

The only Americans to lose were Bob Hamilton of Landover, Md., and Johnny Palmer of Badin, N. C. Hamilton dropped a 6 and 4 decision to Dai Rees, a stubby little Welshman, and Palmer was squeezed out, 2 and 1, by Jimmy Adams, a Scotsman.

The weather gave the Americans a big boost. Yesterday the drought-baked course, with greens almost as hard as concrete, forced them to

Baves Down Cards, 4 to 2, Although Outhit by 9 to 5

St. Louis, Sept. 17 (AP).—Bill Voiselle allowed nine hits while his teammates garnered only five, but they were enough for the Boston Braves to take a 4-2 victory from the St. Louis Cardinals today.

The win kept Redbirds' lead over the Brooklyn Dodgers at 2½ games. The Dodgers took a beating from the Pittsburgh Pirates, 7-2.

Only man to really trouble Voiselle was Ron Northey, who homered in the second with the sacks empty and doubled in the eighth with Stan Musial on second and Enos Slaughter on first. Musial scored. But Voiselle got Glenn Nelson to pop out, ending the inning.

The Braves picked up three of their runs in the second frame off Al Brazle. Bob Elliott was hit on the knee by a pitched ball. Sibby Sisti singled, Elliott taking third. Hank tapped out advancing Sisti to second.

Then Tommy Holmes grounded out, Elliott scoring. Del Crandall singled, scoring Sisti, and Voiselle doubled, bringing Crandall home.

Ted Wilks came in and stopped the attack.

The Braves added another run

Everybody Invited

Redskins to Hold Clinics At Ball Park, Oct. 12-19

THE WASHINGTON REDSKINS are going to let their head feathers down and throw a couple of football parties, October 12 and October 19, for all of the nonprofessional players around town, in particular, and the football-going public in general.

Actually, these affairs will be football clinics, under the sponsorship of The Washington Post, and both will be held at night, starting at 7:30 o'clock, at Griffith Stadium.

The big idea is for the Redskins to act as instructors and show football-minded Washington how the fundamentals of the game should be executed, from passing by Sammy Baugh and Harry Gilmer to kicking off by Bob Goode, giant rookie from Texas.

Harry Wismer, who keeps things humming at the National Celebrities golf tournament and the Touchdown Club's annual banquet, will be master of ceremonies, handling the public address microphone on the field.

THE REDSKINS will hold a regular practice each of these nights and go through a mock scrimmage so that Wismer can take plays apart and describe them to the audience.

Baugh will be called upon to explain tricks of the trade which have made him the game's greatest passer. Linemen will show how they carry out blocking assignments; backs how they break for the open. In fact, all phases of the game will be gone over in detail.

Every football player in the Washington area is invited to attend, including college, high school, prep school, grade school, sandlot, boys' clubs, and so on.

The general public also will be invited to attend. There will be no admission charge, although tickets will be required. These will be distributed by The Washington Post.

To make the evenings complete, the Redskin band will liven things up, just as it does at Redskin games.

My Sweetie Wins 1st Heat In Cup Event

By Happy Walker

The shining star of the opening day of the President's Cup Regatta yesterday was a quiet mannered Louisville, Ky., chap named Bill Cantrell. Never one to make pre-race predictions, Cantrell got out on top and stayed there to win the first heat of the President's Cup event.

From the very start it was apparent what Cantrell had in mind. Lap after lap he kept his foot hard-pressed against the floor board of Horace Dodge's My Sweetie 'til he got the checkered flag from Bill Little, three-quarters of a mile ahead of his nearest adversary.

Laps Three Rivals

Going into the fifth lap, Cantrell had lapped three of the tail enders, a master of the 15-mile course all the way.

In his starring performance, Cantrell hung up a new heat record, with a blistering speed of 78.510 miles per hour, knocking over Dan Arena's 1948 record of 77.856 miles per hour. The former big-time auto racer made it a double-barrelled first heat victory by pegging a new lap record of 83.18 miles per hour, also against Dan Arena's 81.06 last year.

Cantrell was not pressed too severely by the limited field, as the speed of 75.126 miles per hour posted by Lou Fageol, in Such Crust I, indicates. Fageol came in second, followed in order by Such Crust II, Dan Arena driving, Etta, owned and driven by George Sarant, Betty V, the Mel Crook entry, and Astraea, owned by D. Cameron Peak.

All Boats Finish

Chief Scorer Jack Annadale recalls that yesterday was the first time in many a year that all President's Cup starters finished, another added record.

The predicted field of an even dozen gold cuppers had dwindled to six by starting time because of motor failure and nonappearance. Guy Lombardo was not present. Harold Wilson's Miss Canada was

Terps Make Good Showing

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hershey, Pa., Sept. 17.—Pennsylvania outscored Maryland, four touchdowns to three, in a six-quarter practice scrimmage here today.

The session may prove costly to the Terrapins, Jim Brasher, standout defensive center, was carried from the field with a painful back injury. He was left in the Hershey infirmary when the Marylanders departed for College Park, Md.

Buck Early and Bob Shemonski, sophomore halfbacks, received leg injuries during the battle and had to be helped from the field. Neither is believed to be seriously injured, however.

Junior Quarterback Stan Lavine and Junior Halfback Joe Kuchta sparked the Terps' offense. Lavine got off a 30-yard pass to End Stan Karnash for a touchdown in addition to turning in a 30-yard sprint which set up another Maryland tally. Kuchta raced 25 yards for a Terrapin score.

Penn's winning tally came on a blocked punt, with Eric Larson, 290-pound, 6-foot-7-inch tackle, blocking an Earl Roth punt and falling on it in the end zone for a touchdown.

Belle Haven Victor

The Belle Haven Country Club junior tennis team defeated the Washington Golf and Country Club juniors, 6-3, yesterday, on the Washington Club's course.

Cliff Fannin Loses Duel To Dobson

Boston, Sept. 17 (AP).—Although limited by Right-hander Cliff Fannin to five hits, three of them doubles, the Boston Red Sox defeated the St. Louis Browns, 3-2, today for their sixteenth consecutive home victory.

Joe Dobson gave the Brownies nine hits as he chalked up his thirteenth victory against 11 losses to keep his pennant-hopeful forces two and a half games behind the top-place New York Yankees.

The Browns got their first run in the second inning on a double by Roy Sievers and a Dick Kokos single. Sievers scored again in the fourth when he drew a base on balls and was clubbed around by Kokos and Les Moss.

The Red Sox tallied twice in the second inning when Billy Goodman doubled in Junior Stephens and Al Zarilla. Lou Stringer's two bagger drove in Goodman with the clincher in the sixth frame.

While making their 1949 Fenway Park farewell, the Browns put on a threatening ninth inning stand. Kokos opened that frame with a two bagger into rightfield. After Moss flied out, Pinch Hitter Sherm Lollar drew a base on balls.

Whitey Platt then came into bat for Fannin and lined to Ted Williams, who ended the game by doubling up Kokos at second base.

It was the Red Sox' fifteenth win in their 22 starts against the Browns, winners in only one of their 11 Boston starts this season. The Red Sox have dropped but two of the last 29 games they have played on their chummy home premises.

double and two singles, the Indians accumulated 16 hits.

Cleveland scored one in the first inning, but Washington came back with two runs on singles by Ed Stewart, Sam Mele and Robinson and Eddie Yost's infield out.

In the third, Cleveland pulled ahead, 3-2, but Robinson's homer tied the score. It was Washington's dying gasp.

Tribe Rallies in 6th

Vernon drove in the "winning run" in the sixth. Keltner led off with a single and moved to third on Bob Kennedy's double to left. Vernon pulled a single past Robinson, scoring Keltner. Jim Hegan scored Kennedy with his long liner to Coan.

Doby's fielder's choice, and a double by Keltner, made it 6-3, in the seventh. In the eighth, Vernon's two-base hit, and Mitchell's single sent Harris to the showers. Boudreau continued the attack on Reliefer Joe Haynes with a run-scoring single to right.

Scott Runs 81 Yards to Beat Bears

Philadelphia, Sept. 17 (AP).—A human gazelle named Clyde (Smackover) Scott raced 21 yards through a bewildered Chicago Bear defense tonight to give the Champion Eagles a 14-7 victory in a National Football League preseason game at Municipal Stadium.

A crowd of 88,000 saw the Bears take a 7-0 lead in the first period of the game sponsored by the Philadelphia Inquirer Charities, Inc. Sid Luckman passed 17 yards to George Gulyanics for the Bear score and George Blanda, rookie quarterback from Kentucky, converted.

The Chicago touchdown held up until the third period when Tommy Thompson passed 53 yards to Neil Armstrong for a six pointer. Cliff Patton converted to tie the score.

Less than three minutes later, Thompson faked a handoff to Steve Van Buren and gave it to Rookie Scott for the climax play of the game. Patton converted again to give the Eagles a 14-to-7 lead.

The Bears never threatened after their opening period touchdown while the Eagles were held three times inside the Chicago 10-yard line. Tommy Thompson was voted the outstanding player of the game and awarded the annual Robert J. French Memorial Trophy.

Stanford Romps, 49-0

Palo Alto, Calif., Sept. 17 (AP).—The offensive-minded Stanford Indians scored almost as they pleased against outclassed San Jose State at Stanford Stadium today, rolling up an imposing 49-0 score in their season opener before 27,000 persons.

Sweltering heat which seemed to wilt the San Jose players as the game progressed seemingly had little effect on the hard-running Indians.

Bucs' 5-Run 7th Rally Beats Bums

Pittsburgh, Sept. 17 (AP).—Pittsburgh jolted Brooklyn's pennant hopes again today with a five-run splurge in the seventh inning that brought the Pirates a 7-2 victory over the Dodgers.

Wally Westlake tripled with the bases loaded to feature the big seventh.

Little Murry Dickson handcuffed the Dodgers with five hits while his mates teed off on two of Brooklyn's three hurlers for 13.

It was the second straight triump for the Pirates over Brooklyn. They shellacked the runner-up club 9-2 last night.

The score was tied at 2-2 when Pittsburgh went to work in the seventh on Erv Palica, who relieved Jack Banta in the fourth.

Stan Rojek's single, Tom Saffell's walk and a safe bunt by Johnny Hopp loaded the bases for Westlake. He cleared the sacks with a three-bagger to the exit gate in right center. Monty Basgall's single scored Westlake and Basgall came home on Clyde McCullough's triple.

Mere Males Lose Fishin' Monopoly

By Ralph Murdock

SEVERAL YEARS ago when you were out fishing and spied 12 anglers on a fishing boat, it was a lead pipe cinch that all on board were men. But times have changed.

MURDOCK

Today the fair sex and and the youngsters are also fond of fishing and enjoy the thrill of a fish tugging at the lines.

During a recent northeast blow we happened to drop by Chesapeake Beach to get an "on the spot" picture of how the fish was biting. While discussing the fishing situation with Johnnie Gross, the Sylvia pulled in to dock. It was the only party that had ventured out to the bay. All of the other parties had cancelled their reservations due to the existing northeaster.

Much to our surprise, the party consisted of four men, four women and four children. The writer inquired how they made out and Jack Posner, the spokesman for the party, said, "We had planned the trip for today and although we knew the fishing would be bad we did not want to disappoint the youngsters. So we took a chance!"

They were Stanley Gordon, Jack Posner, his wife Gertrude, and their youngsters Judy, 9, and Bobbie, 13, Eddie Chayt and his wife Ada, Abe Kaufman and his wife Dora, and Myra Potter and her youngsters, Anita, 11, and Judy 6. They caught only 18 spot and 2 bluefish, but they all said they had a swell time.

OUT OF RIDGE, MD. comes this report. Floyd Hedrick, Henry Tanner, John Harris, Milton Clark, Bob Ashby, Pete Kourvenberg, and Jerry Jones caught 132 fish consisting of spot, trout, bluefish, and flounders. Some of the trout and flounders hit the 2½-pound mark. Bloodworms and peeler crabs were used for bait. The Point Lookout area has furnished the best catches of trout to date.

It appears that Breezy Point also is a likely spot for trout fishing. Raymond Taylor, Robert Fraser and China Reed started out to fish the other day when the other boats were returning and made their haul by the light of the moon. The 53 trout they nabbed weighted from 1 to 2¼ pounds. Their take also consisted of six hardheads, six spot and two bluefish. Peeler crab and shrimp were the tasty morsels that inveigled the fish. The three anglers fished from an outboard motor boat.

Here's a lulu that emanates from Wildwood Crest, N. J. Mary Ellen Hopkins, New York clothes model, was fishing off the dock of Sunset Lake. She hooked her fish, a weakfish but when she pulled it up the fish was inside of a bottle. The hook had dropped through the neck of the bottle and the fish was hooked through the lip. The fish was too large to escape from its glass prison and had evidently been in it for some time.

Clemson Romps

Clemson, S. C., Sept. 17 (AP).—Clemson tonight defeated Presbyterian, 69-7, in the football opener for both South Carolina colleges. It was the fifteenth straight victory over three seasons for Clemson's Southern Conference champions.

55,000 See Bears' Pass Game Click

Berkeley, Calif., Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Coach Lynn Waldorf added a pass attack to his famed end sweeps and double reverses today and it paid off as his injury-riddled University of California Bears came from behind to defeat Santa Clara, 21 to 7.

With a crowd of 55,000 looking on, the Bears offered an aerial offensive for the first time in three years under Waldorf.

Handling the passing was Dob Celeri, with lightning-fast Charley Sarver on the receiving end. The vaunted Santa Clara veterans, after a 57-yard touchdown march the first time they got the ball, never threatened seriously.

Trailing 7 to 0 going into the second period, California got right into the ball game when they marched 75 yards. The touchdown was a one-foot plunge by Montaigne. Jim Cullom made good on the first of three conversions.

California went ahead a few minutes later when Quarterback Charley Erb dropped back from his own 48 and passed to Sarver on the 10, Sarver going the rest of the way untouched.

The clinching counter was set up in the fourth period on a double reverse that sent Sarver around end all by himself for a 33-yard gain. With the ball on the 9, Fullback Jim Monachino picked up 7, and then Erb smashed over for the touchdown.

Quarterback Johnny Pasco ripped over from the 4 for Santa Clara's touchdown. Joe Vargas kicked the point.

Huskies Whip Utah, 14-7 On 80-Yard Goal Sprint

Seattle, Sept. 17 (AP).—An 80-yard sprint by Sub Fullback Henry Tiedemann as the clock was running out brought the University of Washington a 14-7 victory over Utah here today before 28,000 fans.

Utah had fired one arrow for a touchdown, fought back as Washington thrust two yards short of the goal and quick-kicked the Huskies dizzy before the roof fell in.

With time running out it seemed the Utes were sure to wind up with a 7-7 even break. Then Herb Anderson lofted a 42-yard punt to Rolly Kirkby on the Washington 20. Kirkby handed the ball to Tiedemann on a criss-cross and the 190-pound Berkley (Ill.) sprinter went all the way with great blocking.

Washington State Routs Utah Aggies 33 to 0

Pullman, Wash., Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Washington State College whipped Utah State Agricultural College, 33 to 0, today in a nonconference football game before a crowd of 14,000.

Utah State Coach George Melinkovich found his Aggies far outclassed when he stepped from the Rocky Mountain Conference to the Pacific Coast Conference to meet the Cougars.

W & M Wins By 14 to 13

Houston, Texas, Sept. 17 (AP).—Fullback Jack Cloud scored two first half touchdowns tonight and then saw his William and Mary Indians have to battle furiously to gain a 14-13 victory over the University of Houston.

Villanova Socks Texas A&M, 35-0

College Station, Tex., Sept. 17 (AP).—Villanova slashed Texas A. and M. 35-0—the worst licking an Aggie football team has suffered in 18 years.

The great Wildcat line hammered the Cadets unmercifully and the driving Villanova back ran through the Aggie guards and tackles.

A. and M. fumbled to set up three of the touchdowns, interfered with a pass on another and an Aggie baack deflected a pass to help Villanova to the fifth score.

Nevada Wins, 41-21

Cincinnati, Sept. 17 (AP).—The University of Nevada's Wolfpack had far too much power for Cincinnati's Bearcats here tonight and romped to a 41-21 victory, which opened the football season for both clubs.

'Skins Play Packers in Milwaukee

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

Milwaukee, Sept. 17.—The idea of winding up their 1949 exhibition schedule in this city, tomorrow against the Green Bay Packers at State Fair Park, seems to be pleasing to the Washington Redskins.

Milwaukee and the Packers were kind to the Redskins last year. Either that or the 'Skins took advantage of Wisconsin's hospitality.

At any rate, after a 45-0 preseason licking by the Packers in Birmingham, Washington's bright young men came to the city made famous by beer and had a big day for themselves. When it meant most, in a league game, they hung a 23-7 beating on Coach Curly Lambeau's lads.

Packers Lose 2 Out of 3

This year the Packers are considered the nearest thing to a "soft touch" in the Western Division of the National Football League, just above the Detroit Lions. They've played three games and won only one, a 14-7 decision over the New York Giants. The Philadelphia Eagles registered a 35-0 victory and even the Pittsburgh Steelers, weak sister of the eastern section, whipped Green Bay by a 9-3 count.

Not that the Packers aren't expected to put up a struggle. They have their customarily huge forward wall, augmented by a brilliant young guard from Oklahoma, Paul Burris, and still running their T-type formation is Indian Jack Jacobs, the former Redskin.

Of particular interest to local folk, however, will be the home debut of Stan Heath in the Packer backfield. The former Nevada passing ace will operate with such running dependables as Tony Canadeo, Ted Fritsch, Walter Schlinkman and the Wisconsin University flash, Earl (Jug) Girard.

Gilmer Gets Big Assignment

Redskin Coach Billick Whelchel will put his team almost entirely in the hands of Harry Gilmer, rookie from Alabama, in a final attempt to season Sammy Baugh's understudy before the Skins' opener against the Cardinals September 26 in Chicago.

Gilmer must do without the services of halfback Eddie Saenz, injured in the face during practice last week, and a pair of rookie tackles, Len Szafaryn and Laurie Niemi. The latter pair is suffering from leg injuries and will be kept idle until the Chicago game.

Jersey Joe, 39 Other Pilgrims, See Pope

Castel Gandolfo, Italy, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Pope Pius XII received American Boxer Joe Walcott today in a group of 40 pilgrims. The heavyweight knelt before the Pope and kissed the fisherman's ring on the left hand.

After Slow Start

Wake Forest Wins From Duquesne, 22-7

Wake Forest, N. C., Sept. 17 (AP).—Wake Forest opened its football season today by trouncing Duquesne, 22-7. A sweltering crowd of 12,000 saw the Deacons spot the Dukes a touchdown in the early minutes and then come back with a score in each of the first three periods.

A hefty line opened the way for the Deacon backs, including several classy sophomores, to run for steady gains throughout the day.

The Dukes got their scoring over early. With only three minutes gone, Wake Forest's Carroll Blackerby looped a pass to end Ed Butler. However, fullback Leo Elter of Duquesne grabbed the ball on his 29 and scooted 71 yards for a touchdown. Bob Bretz place-kicked the extra point.

The Deacons then marched down the field to score in 11 plays. Halfback Bob Jones finally went over from the 2.

They added a safety a few minutes later on a punt blocked in the end zone. Sophomore halfback Billy (Nub) Smith went over from the 4 for a touchdown in the second quarter after the Deacons drove 95 yards.

The final score came in the third period after Duquesne's halfback John Duchess fumbled on his 37. Halfback Bill Gregus went over from the 2 a few plays later.

Tackle Bill George, who shone in the line and did the punting, was successful in two of his three place-kick tries.

The Deacons displayed a bevy of fine backs in racking up 275 yards rushing to 78 for Duquesne. Gregus, one of the top runners in the Southern Conference last year, stood out as usual.

However, the Deacon sophs nearly stole the show. Dickie Davis, quarterback from Wilson, was a standout at passing. Bill Miller, fullback from Suffield, Conn., reeled off several nice runs. Billy (Nub) Smith, highly-touted halfback from Fayetteville, got away for one twisting, squirming gain of 20 yards on a punt return. Bobby Stutts, halfback from Burlington, also got away for several long gains.

TCU Blanks Kansas, 28-0

Lawrence, Kas., Sept. 17 (AP).—Lindy Berry's timely passing and a methodical ground attack rolled Texas Christian University to a 28-0 victory over the Kansas Jayhawks here today.

Some 32,000 fans, a record opening home attendance for Kansas football, watched Berry, 175-pounder, engineer the Horned Frogs to a 21-0 halftime lead. He scored TCU's first and last touchdowns, going over from the five-yard line after eight minutes of play and running back an intercepted pass 44 yards in the final period.

In between Berry's touchdowns, TCU scored with quarterback Don Wilde going 26 yards and fullback John Morton cracking over from the one-foot line. Both came in the second quarter.

After each touchdown, squatty Homer (The Toe) Ludiker placekicked squarely between the bars.

TCU also had a clear cut victory in the statistical chart. The Frogs made 20 first downs to 8, outpassed the Jayhawks, 184 yards to 90, and had a ground advantage of 219 yards to 113.

Texas Steamrolls Texas Tech, 43 to 0

Austin, Tex., Sept. 17 (AP).—The University of Texas opened its 1949 football season today with a 43-0 massacre of Texas Tech.

Use of third and fourth string Longhorns did not slow the scoring pace. The near 95-degree temperature was rough on the Red Raiders from Lubbock, Tex. They couldn't gain when they moved near the Texas 20.

Fullback Lewis Levine of Harlingen, Tex., starting in place of Ray Borneman, initialed the scoring. His 7-yard cross buck at left tackle climaxed a 47-yard drive in the first period.

As 28,000 fans watched in Memorial Stadium the Longhorns scored in every period.

Idaho Swamps Willamette, 79 to 0

Moscow, Idaho, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Idaho whizzed to a 79-0 victory over a hopelessly undermanned Willamette University eleven here today.

West Virginia Romps, 42 to 7

Morgantown, W. Va., Sept. 17 (AP).—West Virginia University's football team scored in every quarter here today to open its 1949 season with a 42 to 7 victory over Waynesburg (Pa.).

Mountaineer substitutions were frequent and every player in uniform saw action as West Virginia completely outplayed the Yellow Jackets.

The Mountaineers drove 88 yards for a touchdown late in the opening period, then powered their way 57 yards for another tally early in the second quarter.

An attempted field goal backfired on the Mountaineers one minute, eight seconds before the half ended when Waynesburg blocked the kick on the 25 and end Albert Miniccui rambled the distance for the Jackets' only touchdown.

That made it 14-7 at halftime, with the impact of the West Virginia attack yet to be felt.

The Mountaineers hammered away for two more touchdowns, in quick fashion, in the third quarter and another pair, again in rapid-fire order, in the final chapter.

MARINES—From P. 1-C

V. P. I. Loses To Quantico

Maj. Hal Harwood, head coach, the Gyrenes took all of seven minutes to register their first score. Little George Greco, at 150 pounds considered too light by the college scouts, went 12 yards on a punt return and 36 yards around end to set up the touchdown.

After Greco went to Tech's 7 on the end sweep, Roy Russell scored from the 1 on Quantico's last try on a quaterback sneak.

The Marines, or rightly Bennie Moore, got hot early in the second period. Moore dashed 45 yards to the VPI 43. Then Flores hit End Bob McElroy with a pass good for 20 yards. Dick Ambrogi couldn't gain but had the presence of mind to toss a neat lateral to Clint Young, who went all the way.

This time Guard Bill Eysenbach converted. He soon got another placement try after Mr. Moore returned a Bob Gilley punt 44 yards to the VPI 6.

Again it took four tries, but Clint King, 33-year-old service vet, who's getting a bit bald, went wide from the 1 on a naked run.

Down by 20-0 but far from disheartened, the fighting VPI squad put together 83-yard and 81-yard scoring marches to move back into contention.

Wingo, Southern Conference sprint star, sped to his 26 with the kickoff after Quantico's third score. Then Eustace Frederick, belied his "Useless" nickname by bucking to his 43, in three tries. Tex Lawrence, Navy's center last year, helped VPI along with a roughing infraction that netted 15 more yards.

From the 41, Goodman passed to End Oren Hopkins for 27 yards. Finally, Goodman went over on a quarterback sneak. That marked the second time in two years that a touchdown was scored through Quantico's massive line.

After intermission, VPI again struck. Devastating short passes by Goodman carried the ball from his 19 to his 40. Then Wingo broke loose around end to the Marines' 30.

Goodman resumed his pitching exhibitoin, throwing a strike to End Ron Casto in the end zone. Last year VPI failed to score as many as two touchdowns in any game.

Tech's outweighed line began to feel the strain of the hot sun and tough opponents in the fourth quarter. Roy Russell personally passed the Marines to the 18 and finisned it off with a toss that Bob McElroy took on the eight, just bulling his way over.

One thrill was left. After Moore went 16 and King 13, Ambrogi lost one. Rapid Richard, another Navy boy, then took Flores' short pass just beyond midfield and romped right down the middle on the 54-yard scoring play.

North Carolina Rated Tops in Area Again

(Editor's Note: This is the last of a series of articles on 11 leading college football teams in this area. Today's feature deals with how the teams will rank this season.)

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

WITH TOBACCO men who know football best, it's North Carolina, 2-1.

Deep in the heart of the bright-leaf belt of Tarheelia, they feel that Coach Carl Snavely's Carolinians will once again be one of the Nation's best.

They say this despite the loss of eight veteran tackles and guards, a powerful good fullback in Hosea Rodgers and the addition of Notre Dame to a schedule which was already tremendous.

Every Saturday from September 24 to November 26 is a big one for the dour Snavely, but October 15 and November 12 are the most important to the thousands who live and die by the deeds of the Tar Heels.

Siegel

On the first date, Carolina hooks up with Wake Forest. The November 12 rendezvous is with Notre Dame in New York, high point on Carolina's schedule.

The Baptists from Wake Forest are loaded and, if they play it according to script, they'll probably save up again for the Tar Heels, just as they did two years ago.

As for the Notre Dame game, not even Orville Campbell, Tar Heel diehard who composed a song about Charlie Justice, expects his alma mater to whip the Irish.

"We scheduled that game for two reasons," Campbell quips. "First, we wanted to visit the Big City. Second, we wanted to show the yankees how great Choo-Choo really is. (Editor's note: That a small "y" in Carolina. We'll do 'em both, but I doubt if we can beat Notre Dame. We've just a po 'li'l country school, remember?"

NOTRE DAME and Wake Forest are the two big tests for the Carolinians. Tennessee, 14-7 victim last year, is on the upgrade again, but the Tar Heels shouldn't have too much trouble whipping the Vols. The rest, Duke, N. C. State, Georgia, L. S. U., Virginia and William and Mary will be tough, but the Tar Heels will be tougher.

There's a beefy group of sophomore linemen up from last year's frosh to replace the departed stars of last year. And, most important, there's Charlie Justice again. 'Nuff said.

Righ behind the Tar Heels look for William and Mary. The Indians lost Tommy Thompson, a defensive stalwart on a great defensive club last year, but the Injuns have Fullback Jack Cloud busting through the middle again. North Carolina and Michigan State should provide them with their only losses, with Wake Forest and Pittsburgh offering tough arguments also.

Maryland and Navy are pretty much in the same boat. If the sophomores who scintillated as freshmen last year and later in spring practice can shine a bit from Saturday to Saturday, the Terps and Middies could do well.

Defensively, Coach Jim Tatum's Terrapins will be formidable. Tackle Ray Krouse and Guard Bobby Ward spearhead a stalwart defensive unit.

On the offense, however, it's different. Lack of speed was the big trouble last year. The Terps have a slew of swifties, all sophomores, and a bruiser of a fullback in Mighty Mo Modzelewski. They're yet to be tested in a game. The quarterbacking is fair, only fair. That's the most important spot in Maryland's scheme of offensive operations.

THE TERP schedule, except for Michigan State, may not appear attractive, but Boston U., South Carolina and West Virginia are reportedly armed to the teeth.

Navy once again faces a murderous schedule, starting with Southern Cal in Los Angeles next Saturday and the traditional windup with Army. In between are such pushovers at Tulane and Pennsylvania. This is Coach George Sauer's second year. He's depending almost entirely on recruits up from the plebes with Bob Zastrow, a quarterback built like a fullback, carrying the load. And there's no Bill Hawkins this year, either.

Drop Virginia and Duke in the next spot. Fine offensive team, those Cavaliers, but once again, can they stop the opposition? Duke, trying to regain the glory it knew before the war, is coming up, but won't be ready this year. It'll be a standout defensive unit, as most Wallace Wade coached teams are, but short on the scoring end.

What about George Washington and Georgetown?

Fair. G. W. had two moments of glory last year. The Colonials smacked down a Virginia team favored to win by four touchdowns and climaxed a 4-6 season by beating Georgetown for the first time in its history.

As has been the case for so many years, the Colonials are simply undermanned. Andy Davis can't do it by himself. Against the weaker teams—VPI, W&L—the Colonials will more than hold their own. But against the stiffer opponents, Duke, Maryland and Virginia, Andy Davis will probably add to his personal glory, but not to GW's victories.

The Hoyas are hurt from the go-start. Billy Conn, a truly explosive runner, has an aching tummy and won't be shipshape for maybe another month. By that time, the Hoyas should have tasted defeat from Holy Cross, Boston College, Maryland and Wake Forest, their first four foes.

FOUR STRAIGHT defeats that early are enough to break the spirit of any squad and not even young Bob Margarita, a fellow who can fire up a group with the best, can do much against that kind of misfortune.

V. P. I., W. & L. and V. M. I. simply haven't got it.

If Gil Bocetti, sophomore passing sensation, has a hot hand, W. & L. could make it interesting for some of its weaker opponents, but against the stronger foes the Generals will be outclassed. V. M. I. and V. P. I. will stage one interesting game—between themselves in their traditional Thanksgiving Day skirmish in Roanoke.

And now for outstanding players—

Best of the lot—by a mile—is Choo-Choo Justice.

Here are the other backs who should provide the headlines:

Johnny Papit and Jimmy Lesane, Virginia; Sterling Wingo, V. P. I.; Joe Veltri, V. M. I.; Jack Cloud and Buddy Lex, William and Mary; Billy Cox, Jack Friedland and Glenn (Runnin') Wild, Duke; Ed Modzelewski, Bob Shemonski and Joe Kuchta, Maryland; Billy Conn, Frank Mattingly and Bob Deacon, Georgetown; Bob Zastrow and Frankie Hauff, Navy; and Andy Davis, George Washington; Gil Boscetti, W. & L.

When the talk gets around to tackles, watch for these names on the "All" teams:

Lou Allen, Duke; Lou Creekmur, William and Mary; Ray Krouse, Maryland.

Sizing up the ends:

Art Weiner and Kenny Powell, North Carolina; Vito Ragazzo, William and Mary; Harrison Fraser and Phil Ryan, Navy; Talbot Trammell—a "slecper"—at Washington and Lee; Gene Schroeder, Virginia.

Remember the names of these guards:

Jim McDowell and George Hughes, William and Mary; Bob Ward, Maryland; Jimmy Knotts, Duke; Johnny Thomas, Virginia; Bill Wardle, North Carolina.

Best of the centers:

Bob Keller—a real comer—and Vic Banonis, Georgetown; Irv Holdash, North Carolina; Ted Filer, William and Mary; Jake Rowden and Jim Brasher, Maryland.

Relief for Handy Andy

Bo Rowland Discovers He Has Five Guys At G. W. Each With a Davis Specialty

THERE'S ONE comforting thing about the sore knee which is keeping Andy Davis sidelined during George Washington University's scrimmages.

The Colonials are learning that their best passer, runner and defensive ace is not as indispensable as they thought.

Without Davis in intrasquad drills and against the Navy Plebes, the Colonials discovered a quintet of sophomores who each can do one thing as well as Handy Andy, and can relieve him.

In the Plebe scrimmage the other day, it was Joe Kennelly, a 6 foot, 2 inch Brooklyn Irishman, whose cat-like line backing brought a wide grin of satisfaction to the usually impassive face of Coach Bo Rowland. Impressive also was Charlie (Trigger) Jones, recently converted from end to fullback.

Asserting themselves in intrasquad games, were sharpshooting passer Bob Cilento and hard-running tailbacks Johnny Tivnan and Bill Shaw.

THE STORY of Kennelly's sudden blossoming is refreshing. Never an outstanding player at St. John's Prep in Brooklyn, he applied for a G. W. football post on his own in the spring of 1948.

He was invited to come out for a tryout at spring practice, but failed to excite the coaches. They did not encourage him to return for the fall semester.

But Joe came back, on his own, and enrolled. He tried out for the frosh team again, and his determination and improved passing finally earned him the regular fullback post. The coaches were so pleasantly surprised they recommended an athletic scholarship. It was approved.

When he came out for the varsity last spring, Bo experimented with Joe as a defensive quarterback.

He has shown so much promise that Rowland is sure Workhorse Davis will not have to come in from safety to help make 13 straight tackles as he did in last year's V. M. I. game.

HERB HEFT.

Speedy Sophomores

Hoyas Are 'High' on Hoyas—They're Better Than Last Year, G. U. Squad Members Claim

GEORGETOWN'S football team, opening at Holy Cross Saturday, is going to be better than it was last year.

To a man, that's what the squad says. The boys appear to be sincere in their belief.

The youthful coaching staff, headed by 28-year-old Bob Margarita, hasn't been the only addition at the Hilltop. New faces abound.

Persistent, though, is the feeling that it will take fresh personnel—and a lot more—to improve over Georgetown's last two losing seasons.

Right now the Hoyas are definitely underdogs against five of their nine opponents—Holy Cross, Maryland, Wake Forest, Boston College and Villanova. One will have to be upset to provide a winning record. It's difficult to determine which, if any, it will be.

Georgetown has at least a dozen sophomores who will see plenty of action. Coach Margarita makes it plain that their use isn't to be misconstrued as part of a building campaign. "We're using the best football players we have," he explained, "it just happens a dozen or so are youngsters without varsity experience."

THEN THERE ARE a few used sparingly last season who have prominent roles in the Margarita machine. Leading this group is handsome Bob Fortunato, junior guard.

Fortunato's 212 pounds qualify him for the "body beautiful" title. As a matter of fact, he already has been selected as a cover boy, posing as a typical college lineman.

HEADING THE LIST of the sophs counted upon to boost Hoya stock are the trio of quarterbacks, Frank Mattingly, Bob Deacon and Jackie Juen. Mattingly and Deacon are the passers and if they don't click the rest of the list is fairly unimportant.

That list includes Ends Gus Fornaciari and Dick Losh. The former is the speediest wingman on the team and an adept pass receiver. Losh is a good defensive man. JACK WALSH.

Dorothy Germain Porter Wins Women's Amateur Golf Title

New Titlist To Play in Open Here

Ardmore, Pa., Sept. 17 (AP).—Mrs. Dorothy Germain Porter, a Philadelphia suburbanite who refuses to take the game too seriously, today won the forty-ninth Women's National Golf championship by defeating Dorothy Kielty of Long Beach, Calif., in the 36-hole final, 3 and 2. The champion will play in the Women's Open, starting Thursday at Prince Georges.

The 25-year-old matron, mother of an 11-month-old daughter, chatted her way around the Merion golf course, smilingly unperturbed by the methodical deliberation of her rival's play, in winning a crown relinquished by Grace Lenczyk in the first round.

The comely Mrs. Porter was a front-runner practically the entire distance in turning back the threat of the Coast girl, the Curtis Cup player who was a Wasp pilot in the war and last year won the Western title.

Playing almost casually in comparison with Miss Kielty's intense concentration, Mrs. Porter took the lead on the third hole of the morning round and never relinquished it. She was three up at nine holes, two up at 18 and again two up at 27 in her victory march.

Miss Kielty made a battle of it all the way, but only once after the fourth hole of the morning round was she able to cut the new champion's margin to one hole. Every time she threatened seriously, Mrs. Porter would come through with a fine putt for a win or a great recovery for a half until the outlook became very discouraging indeed for the Californian.

However, the veteran campaigner from the Los Angeles never quit trying, and she had a chance right up to the 34th hole. There her hopes were buried in the nightmarish no man's land known as the quarry. Her second shot landed in this almost hopeless conglomeration of sand, weeds, rocks and bushes, and she was all through as Mrs. Porter was on the green in two.

Putts of 18, 12 and 10 feet largely were responsible for Mrs. Porter, better known in golf circles as Dot Germaine, getting away to her galloping start on the first nine this morning, but a 25-foot putt which dropped on the 10th for Miss Kielty quelled any idea it might be a runaway match.

The Coast girl more than matched Mrs. Porter on the second nine of the first round, her fine 37 slicing her opponent's lead to two holes before the 3 hours and 40 minutes of prelunch play ended.

Bridle Path Winner at Marlboro

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Marlboro, Md., Sept. 17—W. G. Myers' Bridle Path, consistent daughter of Zayin and Park, turned back a formidable field of 2-year-olds in the Prince George Purse, featuring today's program.

The day's mutual handle of $467,644 set a new record for this track.

Before a crowd of 10,094, Bridle Path reached the wire a length and a half in advance of J. R. Funkhouser's Gilded Fox, with L. Genovese's Little Flag two lengths farther back in the group of eight.

Bridle Path, ridden by apprentice Johnny Regalbuto and coupled in the betting with J. N. Barnes' Fetch It, paid $4.60. In accounting for her fifth victory in 10 starts (she's never been out of the money) Bridle Path was clocked in 1.09 2/5 for the 5½ furlongs.

Little Fang Sets Pace

Little Fang, victor over Bridle Path when last they met, went to the front early, setting a good pace with Bridle Path second and Close up and Gilded Fox third.

Along the back stretch, Bridle Path moved to the leader. Little Fang stumbled momentarily at the far turn but recovered stride quickly. However, by this time Bridle Path had assumed the lead and was drawing out.

In the stretch, Regaubuto kept Bridle Path to a drive and this proved right when Gilded Fox rallied. The Funkhouser hope was close in on the leader in the final drive. Little Fang, though tiring, kept the show safe from Sun Rise Red.

The stewards announced after the race that Regalbuto had been suspended for the remainder of the meeting, plus two days, for rough riding in the feature, the boy apparently having been blamed for the stumbling of Little Fang.

McDermott Grounded

Officials also ruled against apprentice Jimmy McDermott, who rode R. L. Hall jr.'s Good Pick into second position in the fourth race. "Dangerous riding" was listed and McDermott will be grounded for the remaining four days here.

The Shangrila Stables, apprentice Richard Lawless and trainer C. P. Sowers teamed to supply two winners on the program. Snowstorm won the fourth race at a $7.40 mutuel and then Hal upset all calculations by winning the sixth event at $69.80.

Babe Arrives Today For Women's Open

Babe Didrikson Louise Suggs Patty Berg

GOLFING GREATS IN TOURNEY HERE

Mrs. Babe Didrikson Zaharias, defending champion in the Women's National Open Golf championship which opens at the Prince Georges Country Club Thursday, will arrive at the club today along with the 1947 Open Champion Betty Jameson.

They will join Patty Berg, president of the Ladies Professional Golf Association, sponsors of the tournament, who won the first National Open title in 1946.

Miss Berg has been on the scene since the middle of the week sharpening up her game.

Mrs. Dorothy Germain Porter, who won the National Amateur title in Philadelphia yesterday, will also play in the tournament.

Also scheduled to get their first look at the course today were Marlene Bauer, 15-year-old National Girl's champion and sensation of the National Amateur last week in Philadelphia and her 20-year-old sister, Alice.

Louise Suggs, former national Amateur champion, is another in the star-studded field to arrive today. Patty Berg commented when she saw the entry list, "Why, there's never been a field like this in women's golf history."

Betty Hicks, 1941 National Amateur champion, is another strong contender already on hand as is Washington's Helen Dettweiler.

Beverly Hanson's 73 from the men's back tees last Wednesday is still the best of the practice rounds to date.

The District will be represented by Mrs. Betty Meckley, Betty Garber, Mrs. Ora Emge, Mrs. Margorie Trouchard, Mrs. A. B. Bower and Mrs. Rex Howard as well as having a rooting interest in Miss Dettweiler.

Also expected in for the 72-hole medal play tournament are such nationally known stars as Grace Lenczyk, 1948 National Amateur titlist; Helen Hicks, who won the Amateur title in 1941; Dot Kielty, Amateur finalist last week, and Polly Riley.

Perry Bent On Revenge Against Bunn

It'll be a hungry Aaron Perry who goes after Sonny Boy Bunn in their 10-round welterweight fight at Joe Turner's Arena tomorrow night and if there's any of the old "Anvil Aaron" left, Bunn is going to be the first to find out.

At the comparative young age of 23, Perry today finds himself in the some position Henry Armstrong and Jim Braddock once were in. He's suddenly awakened to the fact that boxing is the only profession he knows and he had to fight to eat.

Things aren't the same with Aaron as they were when he was drawing $65,000 with Henry Armstrong, and $45,000 with Bee Bee Washington, Smuggsy Hersey and a half dozen other boxers. He hasn't had a big gate in more than two years and if he can't make this comeback stick, things will look pretty black.

Over one two-year span, Perry won 19 fights—mostly by knockouts—and lost only four. He drew the largest gate in Washington's fistic history, the Armstrong fight, and generally rode the wave of success. He'll be starting the long haul back tomorrow.

Harry Garsch, Perry's manager, believes his boxer has made the grade before he even enters the ring. The tipoff, Garsch says, is Aaron's weight—147. "The kid hasn't trained seriously enough to make that figure for some time," says Garsch, "but this time he realizes he has to make good and he's in perfect shape."

The preliminaries have Welterweights Leon Doughtry and Gene Harley and Heavyweights Clyde Williams and Ben Harrison tangling in five rounders.

Newcomer Southern Star Wins Green Hunter Title

By Harry De Mawby Jr.

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 17.—Alex Calvert of Warrenton, Va., introduced a new 3-year-old to the area's show rings today and the Flagpole-Gertrude V filly, appropriately named Southern Star, captured the green hunter championship at the end of the first of the two-day Farmington Hunt Club horse show.

The Calvert stables are in complete command of the important division with Dr. and Mrs. Alvin I. Kay's Washington-owned Portmaker, handled by the Calverts, also leading the coveted conformation hunter division with nine points.

Southern Star, ridden by her owner, scored three wins in the green division with triumphs in the model, green hunters over fences, and green hunter saddle events for 10 points, the championship score in the only fully completed division.

Portmaker was ridden by Alex Calvert to a blue in the conformation hunters under saddle, took top honors in the model event and, ridden by Mrs. Calvert, earned a place award in the qualified hunters and a fourth in the open test.

Estep Back On Turner Show

Zeke Estep, the 300-pound hillbilly whose country style grappling is proving more popular with fans than with his opponents, makes his second Washington appearance next week, wrestling Joe Kamaroff in the semi-windup of the Laverne Baxter-George Macricostas card at Joe Turner's Arena. Zeke defeated Tony Cosenza here last week.

graduate course at Bainbridge for two seasons, among the hard-bitten pros who flocked into the Navy.

THE CHARLIE JUSTICE story, in fact, begins at Bainbridge.

It was a humble beginning. Apprentice Seaman Justice found himself at Bainbridge two days after his graduation from Asheville High School. His draft board had asked him, would you prefer the Navy or the Army? "Can't swim a stroke, so give me the Army," said Choo-Choo. So they swore him into the Navy.

At Bainbridge Lieut. Joe Maniaci, the old Chicago Bear, was coaching the football team. When Maniaci posted the "all out for football!" bulletin young Justice was one of the 100 gobs who queued up at the equipment window where uniforms and shoes were being issued.

The equipment man did an excusable double-take when the 155-pound Justice, looking like a truant from grammar school, presented himself. "Back up," he commanded Choo-Choo, "and come around later." Justice fell to the rear. On his next trip to the equipment window he got short shrift.

"No more cleats left," they told him. "You can have tennis shoes."

In sneakers, Choo-Choo took his first workout, such as it was, with Bainbridge. Maniaci's team was set. Big fellows with pro league experience were available by the dozen. Justice got the brush. When they asked him where he had played college football and he confessed that he was just out of high school, the coaches looked pained.

MANIACI ASSIGNED Choo-Choo to the most menial job in football practice. He sent him down field to return balls that his ace kickers were punting. And then, in a few minutes, it was Maniaci who was doing a double-take. The kid in sneakers was punting those balls back farther and better than Maniaci's punters.

Maniaci developed a sudden interest in the high school boy. A week later he was in the Bainbridge backfield with Harry Hopp, the Nebraska All-American, and Don Durdan, Oregon State's Rose Bowl star. A week after that, Choo-Choo Justice was the hottest thing in Maniaci's backfield.

In a scrimmage against the Redskins, Choo-Choo dashed 18 yards to set up one touchdown, and scampered 33 yards another time. They offered him a postwar contract on the spot.

That Bainbridge team with Justice didn't lose a game in 1943-44. At the end of the 1943 season the Associated Press selected it as the finest football team in the country. Choo-Choo Justice and his maraudings on the gridiron practically amounted to a home-front for the U. S. Navy. Halsey, Nimitz and Justice were sharing the headlines.

In fact, Justice's fame was so embarrassing to Navy that he was shipped to Honolulu during that period when Manpower Boss James F. Byrne was prodding the armed services to get their big-name athletes out of the country. Choo-Choo put in another big year of football in Hawaii, and when the war ended the bidding began.

The pros wanted him direct from the Navy. The collegiate offers of scholarships to Justice were reported to be as many as 60. He says there were only 22. Duke appeared to have him, when in a sudden switch Choo-Choo registered at North Carolina U.

AS IF UNAWARE OF the pressure brought to bear to bring Justice to NCU, Coach Carl Snavely blandly expressed only mild interest when Justice registered. "I hope he comes out for football," said Snavely, in the great understatement of the postwar era.

The subject of Choo-Choo's matriculation at NCU was even a topic at one of his sociology classes when the professor was defining power politics for his class. "Hitler practiced power politics," said the prof. "Power politics put Mussolini in the saddle. That's how Carolina got Charley Justice—power politics."

A war veteran but no war hero, Choo-Choo played it smartly in his first year in college. He noted the number of combat men among the varsity squad, and was embarrassed by the acclaim he was getting even before the first game. The combat guys might be resenting it, he reckoned.

"So I didn't want to be unpopular. I didn't want 'em to think I was a swell-head. I wanted to call 'em all by their first names," he relates, "and I learned 15 first names a day during practice. In four days I knew the whole squad of 60, and they took a liking to me."

His teammates have been liking him ever since at Carolina. They've never noticed the slightest trace of swell-head in Choo-Choo. He's the team's eager-beaver even when he's out of the line-up, leading the cheers from the bench. After his touchdown runs Choo-Choo rushes for the guys who gave him the key blocks and wrings their hands.

CHOO-CHOO POUNDS that theme home, even in the off-season. He's in big demand on the banquet circuit, and his favorite escort is William Carmichael, acting president of the university, who likes to shed dignity and sing with the Sigma Chi Sextet at his banquet appearances with Justice.

At the end of President Carmichael's songs, he introduces Justice. "I've done my act, now you go into yours," he says.

It's a regular routine. "My act takes 10 other guys besides myself," says Choo-Choo. It goes big with NCU's alumni of both the degree-holding and sidewalk persuasion.

When one magazine guessed that Justice was deriving as much as $15,000 a year in cash and honorariums from enthusiastic alumni, the story was promptly nailed, though somewhat impishly by Carmichael, then the university comptroller.

"It's not true," said Carmichael. "I was in on the negotiations. I know for a fact that Choo-Choo isn't getting a dime over $13,500 a year.

In fact, there was a mild boom for Justice to take over the presidency of the college when Mr. Graham moved up as Senator from North Carolina. Carmichael was forced to deny, he said, that his friend Choo-Choo had any such ambitions. "It wouldn't be fair to Charlie's wife and child to accept the president's salary," he grinned.

IT ISN'T QUITE a struggle that Justice is forced to make to eke out a livelihood at Chapel Hill, however. He's situated nicely in a little white house he rents, on the fringe of the campus, with his smart-looking wife, Sarah, and 13-month-old Ronald. Sometimes Jake Wade, the Tar Heels' public relations man, is alarmed by the reports that Choo-Choo is kept in luxury.

When a picture magazine invaded Chapel Hill recently to do a cover-story on Justice, Wade was disturbed at what might have been false impressions. Choo-Choo was driving about in a smart yellow convertible.

"Get out of that new yellow job," Wade commanded. "They may think you have it too easy down here. Go get yourself a beat-up car, if you have to drive."

"Not me," protested Choo-Choo. "This is my car. It's bought and paid for. They knocked down the price for me. And anyway, Jake, things ain't too bad for me around heah."

It's a nice living for Justice at Chapel Hill, but not quite a lazy one. He's a year-round resident. All summer he works for his friend Orville Campbell, of the Colonial Press printing plant. Choo-Choo totes type, jumps the delivery truck, and sells ads for Carolina's football programs. He does all right. Sales resistance melts and commissions mount when Mr. Football calls on a prospective advertiser.

COACHES HAVE been trying to define Justice's skill for a half dozen years now. "He's offer quicker than anybody else," was Maniaci's tribute. "He has the leg-drive of a 200-pounder," says Art Gueppe of Virginia. "He uses his blockers," says Maryland's Jim Tatum. "He thinks every play ought to go for a touchdown," says Jake Wade. "No coach ever had so much in one package," gloats Carolina's Carl Snavely.

In six seasons at Bainbridge and Carolina, Choo-Choo has never been hurt despite his mere 165 pounds. Once he did come up with a sprained ankle, "but that was in junior high school."

Choo-Choo indicates he'll turn pro in 1950. "I'm guessing I will," he says. "I want to coach, but a couple of years in the pro league won't hurt me, and the money would help. I'll see what they offer. These college touchdowns don't put any cash in Sarah's bank account."

He isn't too small to play with the pros, he says. "Shucks, I played with 'em at Bainbridge and didn't get hurt. Learned a lot of football from them. Harry Hopp showed me how to pick my holes, and Don Durdan showed me how to throw the ball, and not to let all that publicity go to my head."

He isn't worried over Bill Dudley's complaint that a 170 pounder is too small for the pro leagues. "Aw, shucks, Bill's just saying that. He's done all right. Best football player I ever saw. You get your teammates liking you and playing for ya, and you don't have much trouble against those big guys."

Physically, Choo-Choo has been doing all right despite the fact that he is the target of the opposition in every game he plays. They're never gentle with him. They like to tackle him high, because (1) he's tough to get low and (2), they want to wrestle that ball away from him. Tennessee last year tore four jerseys off Choo-Choo's back, at $9 a copy. For every game the Carolina equipment man packs five No. 22's, just to be sure Choo-Choo won't wind up shirtless.

IN ADDITION to his ball-carrying, Justice puts a pretty good foot forward when they ask him to punt. His first two kicks for Carolina were blocked in his freshman year by V. P. I. Nobody has blocked one since in Justice's last 180 punts. And that he punts no bunts, Maryland will attest. Choo-Choo got off one boot of 84 yards against the Old Liners last season, en route to topping the Nation's punters.

Orville Campbell, former editor of the campus newspaper, and Hank Beebe collaborated on a song dedicated to Justice that has already been accepted by top-ranking music publishers in New York. Sure enough, it's titled "All the Way Choo-Choo," and the melody is catching.

By the time Choo-Choo moves into New York with Carolina for the Notre Dame game on November 12 at Yankee Stadium, the best song-pluggers will be singing "All the Way Choo-Choo," and for Notre Dame there is warning in one jingling verse of the lyrics, which goes:

"Punt for-mation, once was called—
Choo-Choo wait-ed for the ball—
Why-it ought to be a-gainst the law—
They found that things in Ar-kan-sas."

Brownell Wallops Bogart, 9-8, for D. C. Title

Bobby's 67 Sets Mark; 5th Crown

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Bobby Brownell romped to his fourth straight District Amateur championship at Kenwood Country Club yesterday, trouncing Ralph Bogart, 9 and 8, in the scheduled 36-hole final match. Brownell also won the title in 1936.

Brownell, who tied the course record of 68 in his qualifying round Wednesday, outdid himself yesterday with a 34, 33—67 for the first 18 holes to set a course record.

Off to Bad Start

Bobby started out with a six, two over par, on the first hole, parred the next two par-three holes and took a birdie three on the par-four hole when he holed out a wedge shot from the trap. He added another birdie on the next hole before Bogart could slip in a birdie deuce on the sixth.

They halved the next two holes in par and Brownell won the ninth with another birdie for a front nine of 34 and a two up lead at the turn.

Brownell continued his surge with a birdie on the tenth, but Bogart countered with a birdie three on the eleventh, which Brownell matched with a par on the twelfth as Bogart strayed for a bogey.

Wins Last Five Holes

The thirteenth was halved in pars and then Brownell won the last five holes of the morning round with four pars and a birdie to hold an eight-up lead at the halfway mark.

Brownell used only 24 putts to Bogart's 32 for the round. Bogart had a medal score of 36, 39—75.

Brownell won the first hole of the afternoon as Bogart took a bogey and then they halved the last nine holes as the match ran out when Bogart missed a desperation chip shot to keep the match alive on the tenth green.

Miss Request Wins Beldame

New York, Sept. 17 (AP).—Miss Request sped down the stretch today to capture the $71,700 Beldame Handicap at Aqueduct, as Harmonica was diqualified from second money on a foul and placed out of the money.

Plunder was moved into second position, and Mother into the show spot in the 1⅛-mile event.

The winner, clocked in 1:52 4/5, returned $14.40, $7.90 and $6.60 across the board.

The stewards ordered the official signal held up while they examined pictures of the race for a possible foul.

Eighteen horses started in the rich event, run before a crowd of 31,171 persons on the final day of the Aqueduct meeting.

Jockey Eddie Arcaro was aboard Miss Request, owned by Mrs. Ben F. Whitaker.

After examining the pictures, the stewards took down the number of Harmonica, and moved Plunder to second, and Mother to third.

Ponder Third Behind Donor

Pawtucket, R. I., Sept. 17 (AP).—Ponder, this year's Kentucky Derby winner and favorite in the $25,000 added Narragansett special, took a dusty third place behind Donor today before a crowd of 30,473 racing fans.

It was Donor's second triumph in this race—the first time any winner repeated. Mrs. Deering Howe's horse ran the mile and three sixteenths course in 1:56 2/5—a head ahead of I. J. Collins' Vulcan's Forge.

But Calumet Farm's Ponder—the 2-5 favorite—was a neck away from the second place horse. Donor's time was nearly two full seconds off the track and world's record held by Lucky Draw.

Gun Club Holds Shoot Today

The Capital Area Gun Association, with 19 member clubs, will stage its .30 caliber qualifications today at the Fort Belvoir, Va., range. The director of civilian marksmanship in the Department of the Army will provide military qualification medals to civilians who attain proficiency scores equal to those required of military personnel.

Metro League All-Star Game Listed Today

The Metropolitan Amateur Football League will hold its second annual All-Star double-header at Gonzaga Field today at 12:30.

In the first game, Car Credit, undefeated for three years, will meet the Anacostia Eagles, while Eastern A. C., defending titlist in the 160-pound league, takes on the Metro All-Stars at 2:30.

Car Credit has won 35 games and been tied once since 1946, being held to a scoreless deadlock by the Eagles two years ago. However, the Creditmen have defeated Anacostia twice in championship playoff games since, and will rule the favorite.

"Skeeter" Nichols, Willie Poms, "Hots" Healey, Ernie Bertolini and Moe Zanger are a few of Car Credit's returning stars, while Cecil Gray, Tech's former All-High fullback, and Bob Troll, former University of Maryland halfback, are valuable newcomers.

The Eagles, always formidable defensively, have added new offensive punch and will be shooting for an upset.

Eastern A. C. is bringing back old favorites in Phil Cocimano, Bill Foley and Adrian Kidwell and has signed new stars in George Youdman, a back; "Red" Foley, an end, and Charlie Butler, a center.

The 160-pound Metro League All-Stars are well fortified in evcry position and are represented by such talent as Eddie Tawney, Bob Beck, Charlie Newman, John Calhoun, Eddie Funk, Ray Nash, Willie Vaughn, John Larkin, "Bo" Wright, Morris Parker, Walt Spittle, Adam Cardinale, Jeff Tizzard, Ralph Ouimette, Bill Pickler, Ralph Beattie, Jim Horan, Herb Rathner and "Happy" Clark.

Wilson High Beats Fairfax In Opener, 12 to 0

Woodrow Wilson's Tigers, paced by Leo Speros and Lee Brunson, defeated Fairfax High School, 12-0, in the football opener for both teams last night at Fairfax Stadium.

Speros scored the first Wilson touchdown in the third quarter on a 3-yard line buck and Brunson intercepted a pass and galloped 50 yards for the winners' other score early in the fourth quarter.

Yanks Edge Tigers by 5 to 4

Yankees got a run in the fourth when Yogi Berra singled, went to third on Vico's high throw to second and scored on Joe Collins' infield grounder.

Cliff Mapes also scored in the fifth on an infield out and Keller counted the fifth and deciding run in the sixth on Phil Rizzuto's sharp double to right field.

Young Art Houtteman, trying for his fifteenth victory, was the losing Tiger pitcher, and Sanford was the winner, but it was Page who got the glory. Of his 53 games—more than one in every three the Yankees have played—New York has won 38, lost 14 and tied 1.

The crowd of 40,758 saw some long range hitting by both teams but particularly by the Tigers, who got two homers, two triples, a double and one single.

Sanford, who allowed only one hit in six innings—Hoot Evers' triple in the second—fell apart suddenly with only three pitches. With one out in the seventh, Aaron Robinson doubled. Vico smashed the first pitch into the right field stands, and Campbell promptly did the same. Out came Sanford and in came Page.

So angry was Sanford at himself for his sudden collapse that he actually beat his head in chagrin against the top of the Yankee dugout on his way to the clubhouse.

play unfamiliar runup shots to the pin.

But last night the course was thoroughly soaked by rain. That was what poker-faced Ben Hogan, the little Texan who captained the Americans, had hoped for.

The greens were softer and the Americans fired straight for the pin, playing the game the way they earn a living on the United States professional course.

They played like machinists working methodically at their lathes.

So mechanical were the Yanks that Charles Whitcombe, British captain, called them "robots" when the neat little gold cup again was presented to the Americans.

Whitcombe said he thought his team did "damned well" against that kind of golf.

"Deserved Their Victory"

Lord Wardington, chairman of the British Professional Golfers Association, who presented the cup, said the American players "thoroughly deserved their victory."

The American upsurge began the first crack out of the box this morning. Harrison, the first man off, rolled down a 9-foot putt to win the first hole. He went to the turn in 32, and by the time he had finished his morning round he was home in 67 with a seven-hole lead over Faulkner.

From there on Dutch just matched Faulkner and waited for the end.

Snead staggered Ward with a 35-foot putt on the second hole and a 40-footer on the third to jump into the lead. Ward, hanging on like a leech, got one back by lunch time, but Sam canned another 40-footer on the nineteenth.

That blow unsteadied the little Briton, and all Sam needed to do was play out the string. He did it in an unbeatable five under fours.

Reiser, Injured, Out for Season

St. Louis, Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Outfielder Pete Reiser of the Boston Braves, baseball's "hard luck" guy, went on the sidelines for the remainder of the season today with a cracked rib.

Reiser, ailing all season, was injured several weeks ago in Boston. He will remain in St. Louis, his home town, when the Braves return East.

also missing. Although entered, Harry Lynn's Lahala, 'Flash' Pearson's Fluid Drive and Clarence Clark's Tiger Cat did not put in an appearance.

Motor trouble continued to hound the Dossin Brothers' Miss Pepsi, as she threw a connecting rod in her trial run, scattering motor parts all over the bilge. Frantic efforts were being made late yesterday to fly in another Allison motor by today's race time.

Earlier in the day, Ben Jankowski, Glen Head, L. I., aviation mechanic, piled up 2200 points in the outboard portion of the program, Jankowski, wartime Army pilot, took both heats of the B hydros, a first and second in the C hydros, and duplicated this performance in the F hydro class.

Beats U. S. Champions

Jankowski, who has only been driving since his Army release, bested such outboard aces as Doug Creech, Vic Scott, and Emil Mayer, jr., all national titleholders.

Ike Hale, Washington's tough outboarder and a granddaddy of 16 little Hales, who rarely finishes below the winning circle, pulled a switch by being towed off the course in the second heat of the C hydros. Hale placed fourth in the first heat.

As the heavier and faster hydroplanes took the field, prior to the Gold Cup heat, two out-of-towners, C. Mulford Scull, Ventnor, N. J., and Jerry Powell, Richmond, Va., took the measure of D. C. favorite Joe Palmer. Scull, in his Shooting Star, won both heats of the 123-cubic-inch hydros event. Powell, in Skedoodle, made it a boat length second in both heats. Palmer took a third and fourth.

Motor Goes Out

Powell also lost a heartbreaker 100 yards from the finish in the 225 hydro class, as the Skedaddle's motor cut. C. A. Widenhouse's Virginia's Gold Cup winner, Hazy Day, went on to take the heat.

Joe Van Blerch, Freeport, Long Island, who set a mile world record at Bush River this year, easily won the 7-liter class. Van Blerch's second mile time was 92.303 miles per hour.

Today will ring down the curtain on the twenty-third annual speed classic, with 12 events slated to kick off at 12:40 p. m., including the final two heats of the President's Cup title event.

WHITE OR COLORED—Either one who gets there first—gets the property. Both are negotiating. 500 acres, located 4 blocks beyond the District line, Maryland, in the zone of the new Sooth Capitol st. Bridge. I bought this property 20 years ago at $500 an acre. The bridge was then just talk. Now it's almost completed. The ground is cheaper today at $2,500 an acre than when I bought it for $500 an acre. This bridge will affect real estate values 40 miles beyond our property. This brings these 500 acres within 12 minutes' automobile time of downtown D. C. When I bought in Chevy Chase, D. C., 47 years ago, at an average of $2,000 an acre—one acre of it now where the Peoples Drug Store at Conn. ave. and McKinley is worth at the rate of a million dollars an acre, which is more than I paid for the 400 acres. This South Capitol st. property should do as well in increased value as the Chevy Chase property. If you have vision and faith and the it correctly you will find that Washington is the finest real estate town in the world. Fulton R. Gordon, jr., 1427 Eye st. nw. DI. 5230. Brokers, attention.

Feminine Diplomat From Venezuela Stars as Flier, Skiier, Artist, Poet

By Elizabeth Maguire

FROM VENEZUELA, the land of spring, sunshine and hot music, comes Ana Luisa Branger, cultural attache at the embassy. Her interests, as long and varied as a shopping list, take in sketching, skiing and shooting. For relaxation she hops into a tiny plane and flies high above it all for hours at a time.

She is just 5 feet 4 and she tips the scales at 100. She is quick as a little sparrow and she has an amusing twist to her conversation. She likes to listen to the "Barlovento," joropo, rumba and samba tunes, and she also likes to write poetry. A few of her pieces are now being published in Uruguay in a South American anthology.

A Young Diplomat—With a Bright Future

MRS. BRANGER was appointed Cultural Attache by the Foreign Minister of Venezuela, Dr. Luis Gomez Ruiz, in April, 1949, and she received her State Department card her on May 5. One of the youngest women in the foreign service, she has a bright future in light of the present trend for feminine diplomats.

A deeper knowledge of American culture is channeled through her office, as well as new developments in Venezuelan culture. She is acquainted with exchange students and their activities, and she has the pleasant task of arranging art exhibits for well-known artists of Venezuela.

Mrs. Branger is also an occasional guest lecturer at some of the Washington universities.

Background of Music, Art and Literature

HER WORK requires a wealth of background material. She must know her country's history as well as ours, the literature, music and art of both countries, and all current news items. In her apartment at the Shoreham Hotel are the latest magazines, as well as Washington and New York newspapers, and she spends at least three hours a day on these.

She was born in Venezuela and lived in France a number of years. Her education was received through tutors at home, and she took a degree in philosophy at Aix-en-Provence in southern France. She has a villa at Nice, near Cimiez, and a house in her native Venezuela in the city of Valencia, where her grandfather founded textile industries.

Sun Valley in Idaho and Mont Tremblant in Canada are her favorite ski resorts, and she plans to divide weekends this winter between the two. She will fly back and forth, and when she reaches either destination she will compete in ski races.

She Loves Flying—Including Acrobatics

HER FAVORITE pastime is driving out to Congressional Airport, where she hops into a little airplane, silver and bright as a new dime. At a cruising speed of 110 miles an hour she likes to fly on a sunny day to a nearby island resort, have lunch with friends and return in the late afternoon.

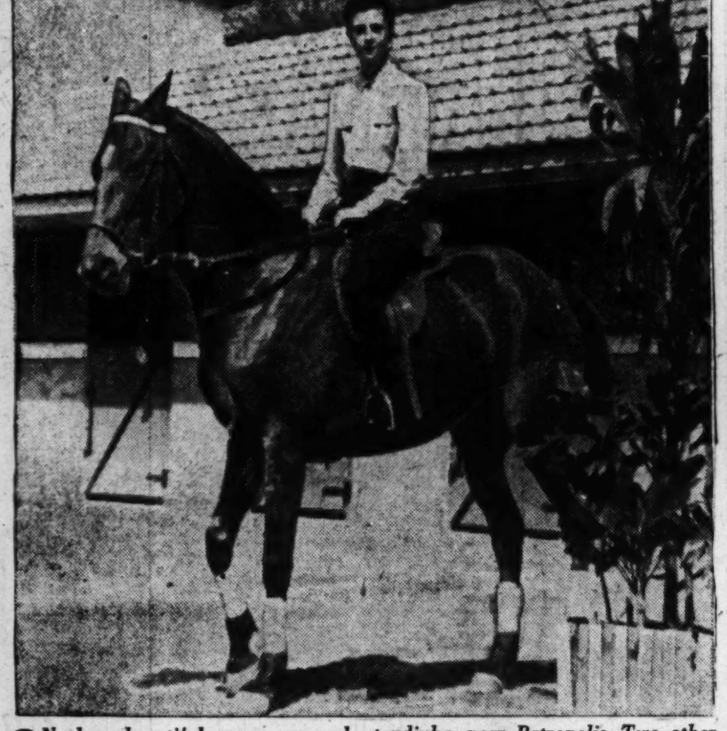
She is the first woman to obtain a flying license in Venezuela, and her license includes acrobatic flying. She made a crash landing one time in Peru after a cross-country flight. The propeller blew off and the plane landed on its belly on a beach near Lima. Mrs. Branger was alone, but she emerged from the plane unscathed.

Add dancing, riding and photography to her interests and you have a list that would tax average abilities. "Sometimes I am surprised myself," she says, and then thoughtfully, "But I do not cook."

Harris & Ewing Photos

VISIBILITY is good, skies are blue, and Mrs. Ana Luisa Branger, Cultural Attache of the Venezuelan Embassy, is ready for a spin in a silvery Cessna-140. Mrs. Branger is the first woman to obtain a pilot's license in Venezuela. Her license includes acrobatic flying

A LETTER from a prospective exchange student is read by Mrs. Luisa Branger, Cultural Attache, and the Venezuelan Minister Counselor, Dr. Santiago E. Vera. Students from Venezuela have been coming here to study for some time, and a systematic exchange of students and professors is now being undertaken by Mrs. Branger. The office in which the cultural attache works is modern and uncluttered. There are red leather benches and a mahogany desk, and on the walls are handsome portraits, including one of Dr. Jose M. Vargas, nineteenth century Venezuelan hero, who served as President of the republic. Also adding local color to the office is a picture of the signing of the independence in 1811. Venezuelan Independence Day is July 5



ON her beautiful mare, named Guria, Mrs. Branger poses before setting off for an afternoon's ride. The picture was taken in Brazil at the stables of the famous Hotel Quitandiuha, near Patropolis. Two other prize possessions of the attache are a Boston terrier, who lives in Peru, and a Doberman Pinscher, presently making his home in Bolivia

AT the entrance to the embassy, Mrs. Branger checks her new Lincoln car to make sure all is ready for a day's drive into the country. Like all airplane enthusiasts, Mrs. Branger's interest in motoring is secondary

AT the mouth of the Rio Chillon on the Peruvian Coast near Lima, Mrs. Luisa Branger with some helpers examines her wrecked plane after a crash landing. The accident came when the propeller blew off at the end of a cross-country flight. This plane was repaired and sold, but the attache has another plane which she still keeps in Peru

Life Is Pleasant, Manners Simple In Scandinavia

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

THINGS WE'VE LIKED LATELY—IN SCANDINAVIA:

Good, simple manners! The Crown Prince of Sweden traveling home from a fishing trip in an ordinary sleeping car, greeted at the Stockholm station by a sole official, and walking through the platform crowds with nary an autograph hound, nary a curious stare, though almost everyone was well aware of his identity. . . . . The King of Denmark, making a speech, saying to the audience "Ingrid sends greetings." If he'd said "Queen Ingrid sends greetings," it was explained, listeners would have thought him high-hat . . .

Stockholm newspapers rapturous front page bulletins reporting A.—91-year-old King Gustav V had gone swimming. B.—He was shaking a mean croquet mallet. King Gustav, incidentally, has given up his brisk game of tennis for less exhausting croquet, lessened embroidery in the interests of photography . . .

The at first puzzling habit of thanking host or hostess, shaking hands with them immediately after a meal.—Looking one's vis-a-vis firmly in the eye while bending elbow and exclaiming "Skaal!"

Cigars for Ladies

Gastronomically and nicotinishly: The pleasant fact that, in Denmark, ladies may and do smoke cigars in public without a flutter of raised eyebrows. There's nothing, we discovered, like a shot of aquavit for breakfast with a slim stogie as chaser.

Lapp pancakes flipped up in reindeer blood oven an open fire . . . The heavenly idea of always chaperoning strawberries and raspberries with vanilla ice cream and goblets of whipped cream. . . . The amazing variety of fish that Scandinavians can dredge from the depths to pickle, smoke, mash, curl around an anchovy.

The Swedish krefta festival, starting August 8 when the krefta—crayfish to you and me—season opens. Simmered with dill until a fine blush scarlet, the little critters are ranged around a dish topped with dill flowers, accompanied by thinly sliced cheese and Swedish bread, washed down with aquavit. Added attraction is that a krefta party always is given latish at night, AFTER a fullblown dinner. The table is decorated with paper lanterns, paper runners depicting the krefta in Walt Disney antics and, if the host is a krefta connoisseur, with linen napkins woven with a design of red krefta.—The Norwegian way of starting off supper, scrambled eggs and richly pink slices of smoked salmon.

The fascinating idea of eating pastry for breakfast, at 11 a. m., at luncheon, at tea, dinner and as a midnight snack.—Swedish waffles, totally unrelated to our indigestiony lumps, and concocted merely from heavy cream, a dash of sugar and

Mary Haworth's Mail

Woman Deplores Her Husband's Use of Bad Words, Fearing the Influence Upon Their Baby Girl's Vocabulary; Is There Way to Counteract Example?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My daughter is two and a half years old and I don't want her to use swear words or naughty words, but my husband does use such language in her presence.

Since before her birth I have implored him never to use such language within earshot of her, and I feel it is bad enough for him to talk that way around me, but worse to set his child such an example. But now that I have tried every form of persuasion without success, I am asking what I should do when Cissy begins using his "bad" words?

How can I teach her it is right for daddy but wrong for her? If I try to instill that idea my heart won't be in it; but surely I mustn't teach her that her father is wrong. Am I silly to let all this bother me, since almost everyone swears these days? Shall I close my ears to it when Cissy starts? I feel certain that when she does start, it won't cure him either.

C. C.

Don't Make Show of Sharp Anxiety

DEAR C. C.: Most good mothers are on the alert to keep their children's vocabularies "clean," but even so, the majority of young children do pick up and experimentally use fragments of rough language not taught in Sunday School.

Ordinarily such experiments are shortlived and the verboten term soon forgotten by the child, if the mother doesn't "drive" the episode into the child's mind by aggressively showing anxious displeasure,—but on the contrary placidly suggests that there are "nicer" ways of expressing oneself, ways that mother likes much better.

Thus in the matter of guiding your daughter's choice of language when she's old enough to speak and "toy" with hearsay phrases, you might explain that daddy's expletives are "man's words," not used by mothers or little girls. If she asks "Why not?" you might simply say, "Because a mama is not a man, and a little girl is not a man,—that's why!" and then dismiss the subject with a smile and an affectionate squeeze for her.

Replace 'Bad' Words With Classic Phrases

IN TAKING that tack you are indicating what is required of Cissy, gently persuading her in the right direction, without condemning dad's performance as a wrong or "shameful" example. And if sometime she comes home to say, "But little Sally down the street says so-and-so, and I heard her mother say it, too, just like daddy does—," then you may take this stand: "Well, I'm sorry about Sally and her mama; I guess nobody ever taught them better, like our mamas did us."

Also a constructive way to terminate such conversations would be to reach for a favorite book of child's verse and say to Cissy, "Let's read about Christopher Robin . . . or Wee Willie Winkle . . . or Little Jack Horner . . . or the Birdie With the Yellow Bill—." Or any choice that is sure to please her. By this method, you are replacing a "bad" word image with a rhythmic flow of spirited "good" words, thus indirectly giving her a "cultivated" taste for lilting or lovely or classic language.

So much for how to keep Cissy's vocabulary reasonably pure despite her father's noncooperative attitude. Actually your apprehension is morbidly excessive, and due I think to the fact that you are personally outraged and mortified by your husband's disregard of your sensibilities. In talking so much of what his example will do to his child—and strongly insisting that there's no antidote for it,—you are trying with almost hysterical vehemence to make him feel "guilty" about his obstinate refusal to oblige your wishes.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

Most youngsters like magic. And if they are able to mystify Pop or Mom or other grown-ups, they're delighted. Here's one of the simple tricks that they should be able to use.

A drinking straw is shown with a string running through it. The young magician bends the straw and cuts right through the center of it with a pair of scissors. It looks as though the string must be cut but when the two parts of the straw are shown, the string is still intact.

Heres the secret. The straw is prepared for the trick by slitting it with a razor blade for an inch or more lengthwise near the center. The straw is bent with the cut on the under side. The string then is pulled down by the protruding ends so that it is hidden by the fingers. Hold the bent straw high up leaving just enough room for the point of the scissors. Once in a while, if the young magician is not careful, his trick may be discovered but usually it is baffling to the onlooker.

Herbal Vinegars Bring Out Flavor Of Vegetables

Use herbal vinegars on dull vegetables or meats, to bring out elusive, tangy flavors, suggests the September issue of Charm, the magazine for the business girl.

Herbal vinegars are easily accessible at most large department stores or at herb shops. An exotic choice is offered for your spice cupboard: tarragon, mint, burnet, marjoram, garlic, elder, or the mixed herbal vinegar.

Tarragon is probably better known than any other of the herbal vinegars. It may be used for marinating chicken before baking, or to give a sharp, spicy taste to broiled fish.

Mint vinegar may be used in a variety of foods. Two or three tablespoons on a lamb roast will give it a delicate fragrance when done.

Two drops of garlic vinegar give an enticing flavor to apple salad, and a teaspoonful in baked beans is elusive and savory.

There's a Place for Everything In Decorative Modern Closets

By Lucia Brown

OUT of sight may not always be out of mind, but it's definitely out of the way!

Clutter and confusion have no place in the modern home, despite its informality and livableness. That's why clothes closets are getting bigger and better suited to a neat sorting-out and storing-away of your possessions behind closed doors.

They're getting prettier, too, as you'll note as you visit the "Homes of '49." In these model houses, now on exhibit under the sponsorship of The Washington Post, the closets often become a definite part of the decorative scheme of the room.

Consider those in the Colonial house in Spring Valley, built by W. C. & A. N. Miller and decorated by Woodward & Lothrop. The closets are a lovely color note in each bedroom for they are painted inside—both walls and double doors—to contrast with the walls of the room.

In the guestroom, closet interiors are citron, a pale yellow that is beautiful against the forest green walls. In the young girl's room, they are willow green to contrast with carnation pink walls. In the master bedroom, they are Madeira, a wine shade, against willow green walls. All these shades are among the House and Garden fall colors. Closets are also fitted with clothes and shoe bags and other accessories in the chosen colors.

"Compartmented" in the most modern fashion are the closets in the Malbrook "Home of '49," built by Malice & Brooks and decorated by Malcolm Scates, Inc. The closet arrangement in the master bedroom is a beautiful example. Here is a whole bank of drawers of graduated depth, topped by several hat compartments. Drawers and shelves are painted gunmetal (a grayish blue shade) to match the adjacent walls, while the folding doors that cover them add a color note. These paneled doors are covered with the same fabric as the draperies, flowered in chartreuse, green and gunmetal. Besides this closet, the room has two full-length ones for the hanging of clothes.

Even in the less expensive houses, special attention has been given the clothes closets.

For instance in the modern Cape Cod house built by Twinbrook, Inc., each closet has a sliding, slatted door to conserve space. These doors of painted wood add a decorative touch to the room, too. Inside each closet is a chest of three drawers and a set of shelves, as well as a bar for hanging clothes. These are included in the price of the house, which sells at $9550.

Sliding metal doors are used on the clothes closets in at least two of the model homes—the semidetached house on Crittenden st. ne., built by Cafritz Construction Co., and the rambler in Carroll Knolls, Md., built by Glassman Bros.

These 18-gauge doors are made of steel sheet metal, painted to match the walls. They are found in all of the bedrooms of the house, in hallways, and in kitchens, ready to slide back at a touch of the fingertips. They are a particular boon in halls and other small rooms where the presence of a hinged door would mean sacrificing precious space.

THE willow green interior of this clothes closet is in charming contrast with the carnation pink walls. It's in a bedroom designed for a young girl in the Spring Valley "Home of '49," decorated by Woodward & Lothrop and built by W. C. & A. N. Miller. The clothes and shoe bags, in a print in deeper shades of the two chosen colors, are admired by Miss Rachel Clark, a Phyllis Bell model, as she tours the house

LOTS of help in keeping your clothes tidy here. A bank of drawers of various depths is examined appreciatively by Mr. and Mrs. Howard A. Thomas of Arlington as they visit the Malbrook "Home of '49," decorated by Malcolm Scates, Inc., and built by Malice & Brooks. Folding doors to cover drawers and shelves are covered with the same fabric as the draperies. This material is flowered in chartreuse, gunmetal and olive green. Two walls in this room are gunmetal and two chartreuse flour, a pinch of spice. Served with coffee, of course.

Norwegian Train Conductor Is Scenic Barker

Conveniences we should have. Like Norwegian trains in which the conductor points out scenic attractions over a loudspeaker—he does it in English as well as Norwegian, starting each brief spiel with a brisk "'Allo, 'Allo."—Swedish street cars, all cheery blue, with loudspeakers calling the stops so that even the dumbest tourist knows when to exit.

A town hall like the magnificent modern (1923) building in Stockholm which is equipped with a banqueting hall which can seat and serve 700 people. Not that the Swedes are dining 700 at a crack these days but still, they've worked their way back to feeding two or three hundred visiting firemen at a time.

The handy automatic street dispensers, found on most corners in Copenhagen, in some Swedish towns, where, for an inserted kroner or two, everything from pastry to meat, from buns to custards slips out of a slot. Small country hotels, simple, minus plushy decor, where all meals are served buffet style with the customer having a horrible time deciding between an incredible variety of cheeses, biscuits, jams, vegetables, hot dishes. Tipping on all bills, so no one can gyp the hired help.

Really first-rate amusement parks with nothing shoddy to offend the eye and sufficiently sophisticated to entice the reasonably aged. Like Tivoli, smack in the center of Copenhagen, a carefully manicured maze of orientalish buildings (it was built by a Dane who spent years as Consul in Morocco) miniature lakes and greenery. For 10 cents admission the customer can view for free a charming ballet performance, acrobats, stunters, buy a glass of Danish beer or eat a really delicious meal in several grades, financially speaking, of restaurants, and indulge in the usual amusement park sports. Some of the restaurants, placed lakeside, are named oriental fashion, Divan No. 1, Divan No. 2—and so on.

Zoos in Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, equipped with really first-class restaurants, that are a pleasure to relax in, not a digestive menace.

Little niceties. Flower boxes high circling lampposts—brass plaques over certain cafe seats where such literary maestros as Ibsen and Bjornston used to sit hours nightly, talking, drinking. The exciting business of having broad daylight most of the night.

progress report
on our expansion building program

We wish to keep you up-to-date on the developments in our expansion program, because we feel that you, our patrons, are principally responsible for the growth and progress we have achieved. We know, therefore, that you will share with us the pride and satisfaction we feel when we see our building next door shaping up into completion.

The start was slow. After obtaining the necessary building permits, we had to reconcile differences of opinion between our architect and contractor. This completed, the crews of carpenters, plasterers, electricians, plumbers and painters moved in for their respective tasks in the program. Things moved rapidly until we hit a few problems, like the one when we discovered that the roof erected was not able to withstand the tonnage capacity of our air-conditioning system. We had to rebuild completely to correct this condition. Our front is almost complete, activities on the inside are moving along nicely. Soon we'll be able to give you a more comprehensive report on our merchandising plans and policies for our new addition.

When making a birthday cake for a person up in years, a novel way of indicating the age is to use pecans or walnuts instead of candles, using a whole nut for each year. One fancy candle may be placed in the very center of the cake to give it a birthday appearance.

The bride wore a white satin Philippine wedding gown with sheer, puffed "butterfly" sleeves. She carried white orchids on a white prayer-book.

Miss Nora Abellera was maid of honor for her sister. The other bridal attendants were Mrs. Edith A. Farran and Mrs. Evangeline A. Paredes, both sisters of the bride, and Miss Trophy Ocampo, assistant press relations officer at the Philippine Embassy. They wore blue and pink gowns of brocaded satin in Philippine style.

Best man for the wedding was Col. Mariano A. Erana of the United States Army and ushers were Bernardo A. De Guia, cousin of the bridegroom; C. T. Elbo, Vice Consul of the Philippine Consulate in New York, and Dr. D. M. Yap, publisher and editor of "Bataan."

A reception was held at the home of Col. and Mrs. Erana following the wedding. When the couple returns from a trip to Havana, they will live in Washington.

The bride is a graduate of National University and Mr. Icarangal is a graduate of Occidental College and George Washington University. He and his bride have been associated with the Philippine Government since 1937.

Sen. Smith Builds Her Dream House —A Maine Rambler

By Genevieve Reynolds

MULTI-TALENTED Senator Margaret Chase Smith, who has chalked up successful careers as a lawmaker, journalist and secretary, now has turned architect. She designed her new, white clapboard dream house in Maine. Over the weekend, she will inspect paints and other building details. Barring emergencies, she will move in around October 1.

The small, rambler-type house is built around a large living-room 40 feet long and 18 feet wide. Large eight-foot windows will afford a panoramic view of the countryside. On the east side she can look down on the town of Kennebeck. From the west windows she can gaze 5 or 6 miles on the village of Norridgewock. Blue spruce walls in the drawing room will blend with the rolling, wooded hillside. Between the spacious windows will be two glass doors leading onto a terrace. A mammoth fireplace will be one focal point. Diagonally across from the fireplace will be nine-feet-high bookcases.

Constructed like a cut-out U, there will be two bedrooms in the west wing, plus a utility room. As the sun fades in the Western sky, the magenta-colored walls and rose-tinted ceiling of one bedroom will pick up and reflect the last rays.

Senator Smith's own bedroom in the east wing will be done in pale blue, her favorite color, and incidentally her campaign color. All of her campaign posters were done in blue instead of the usual red or black print.

In the kitchen a dropleaf table overlooks a picture window. There she will use "campaign blue" and white color combinations for the ceilings and walls.

By the way, Mrs. Smith and her executive assistant, William C. Lewis, jr., designed and built a 12-inch tube television set after the campaign last year. It's the only one of its kind on Capitol Hill.

THERE'S a very good reason why Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper dashes home to dine nightly. His "missus," an excellent cook, generally has one new dish daily, so eating is always a surprise. Throughout the summer Mrs. Hickenlooper has been filing new recipes to add to her already large supply. However, she doesn't just index and forget them. They show up in the ever-changing menu.

WHEN Vice President Alben Barkley admitted going "antiquing" with the St. Louis widow recently, Mrs. John Sparkman thought she might persuade her husband to accompany her on similar expeditions. So far she says, "no success." The Alabama Senator reads the newspaper and leaves the antique-looking to Mrs. S. Over the weekend, they'll be in Annapolis with their daughter and her husband, Lieut. and Mrs. Tazewell Shephard, jr. Lieutenant Shephard is taking post-graduate work at the United States Naval Academy.

WHEN Mrs. Clifford Davis, wife of the Tennessee Representative, went to Florida recently to cure the "Potomac rash," (better known as nerves), she laughingly said "bring on the hurricane." Obligingly, the weatherman complied. While a 125-mile wind plastered the windows with sand, blew off nearby roof-tops, Carrie and her daughter calmly prepared dinner. Carrie says that the radio in the Daytona Beach cottage played more clearly during the storm than before or since.

NOW ON her first trip to Hawaii is Mrs. Arthur V. Watkins, wife of the Utah Senator. She and her two daughters, Jeane and Nina, flew out to Honolulu to visit Mrs. Carl Swalberg. Mrs. Swalberg is the daughter of the Senator and Mrs. Watkins.

Between sightseeing trips and a round of gala parties, Nina and Jeane are taking hula lessons.

BITS OF THIS AND THAT—Representative and Mrs. Mike Mansfield sailed Wednesday on the Queen Elizabeth for Europe. Mike will represent the House at the UNESCO conference in Paris. Joining them in France will be Representative and Mrs. James P. Richards of South Carolina . . . Mrs. Karl Mundt, wife of the South Dakota Senator and Mrs. Fred Bradley, wife of the late Michigan Representative, are spending the weekend in Rochester, N. Y. . . . Mrs. Olin D. Johnston, wife of the Palmetto State Senator, has returned from a stay on the Isle of Palms and in Colombia. While on the beach she chalked up a record for catching crabs and shrimp.

MRS. JOHN NEIL MUNKRES
. . . ceremony in Japan

Alper Vestal Wed in Japan to Lieut. Munkres

Miss Alper Claudia Vestal, daughter of Maj. Van Rensselaer Vestal and Mrs. Vestal of Coronado, Calif. and Washington, was married yesterday afternoon at the Itazuke Air Force Base Chapel in Fukuoka, Japan. The bridegroom, Lieut. John Neil Munkres, USAF, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Neil Munkres of Weeping Water, Nebr. Wearing a gown of white Chantilly lace, the bride was given in marriage by her father in a ceremony performed by Chaplain Delbert C. Partin and the Rev. Donald M. Wilson.

The attendants included Miss Elizabeth Heffernan, Mrs. Kenneth B. Glover, Mrs. Jack T. Martin, Mrs. John A. Martin and Mrs. William T. Knight. Lieut. Robert K. Wright was best man.

A reception was held at the 315th Air Division Officers' Club. The bride was graduated from National Cathedral School and Pembroke College. Lieutenant Munkres attended the University of Nebraska and was graduated from West Point. The couple will live at the Itazuka Air Force Base following a honeymoon in northern Japan.

In Connecticut

Mrs. Lucille Agniel Calmes is vacationing at Timber Trails in Sherman, Conn.

Miss Caroline Howard, Major Fletcher To Wed

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Howard of Washington announce the engagement of their daughter, Caroline, to Maj. Joseph Fletcher. Miss Howard is the granddaughte of the late Judge O. M. Barber of the U. S. Court of Customs Appeals and Mrs. Barber. She is a graduate of the Sidwell Friends School and Wellesley College.

Major Fletcher received his B.S. degree from the University of Oklahoma and his M.S. from the University of California. He worked in the field of Air Force research and development in the Pacific theater during the war and is now director of the Geophysical Research Directorate of the Air Force Laboratories in Cambridge, Mass.

Steps to Broiling Steaks

Autumn is the time for a steak fry.

For a delicious steak dinner, inside or outside, choose a firm, red piece of meat, well-marbled with creamy-white fat. The outside edge also should have a smooth covering of firm fat.

The best steaks are 1½ to 2 inches thick, never thinner than 1 inch.

For a full-flavored, attractively browned steak, cook it at a constant and moderately low temperature—about 350 degrees.

A 1-inch steak, well done, should be cooked 7 minutes on each side. Steaks 1½ inches thick take 9 minutes rare and 12 minutes well done on each side. Two-inch-thick steaks should be cooked 10 minutes on each side rare and 20 minutes on each side well done.

Here are the four steps to follow in broiling a steak, from Successful Farming magazine:

1. Turn the broiler on preheat. Trim off excess fat, leaving a half to three-fourths inch coating on outside of steak. Snip fat on the bias, just through the inner membrane tissue to prevent drawing or curling. Don't pound or salt raw steak.
2. When the broiler reaches 350 degrees, rub the rack with steak fat. Set the rack so a 1-inch steak will be 2 inches and a 2-inch steak 3 inches from heat.
3. Broil the top side of the steak until you have the desired doneness. Then turn the steak by inserting a fork into the fat, not the meat. This prevents loss of juices. Salt only the browned side.
4. Preheat a platter for steak. When the steak is done on the second side, salt it. Lift from the broiler and serve immediately.

By Genevieve Reynolds and Nicha Soure

ACROSS the Nation women will hold listening-in parties, teas, luncheons and rallies when President Truman addresses the gentler sex in a radio broadcast. Occasion will be an all-out celebration of Democratic Women's Day, Sept. 27, under the auspices of the Women's Division, Democratic National Committee.

Here in Washington, the Women's National Democratic Club will observe the annual event with a tea. Members will hear the Chief Executive's radio speech and listen to Mrs. Emily Taft Douglas in person. On the same day at the same headquarters, 1526 New Hampshire ave., nw., the North Carolina Democratic Club of this city will honor women in politics at its annual meeting when featured speaker will be Mrs. Charles F. Brannan, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Marylanders will combine Democratic Women's Day observances with a testimonial dinner honoring Mrs. Jesse Wooten Nicholson, former Democratic National Committeewoman for Maryland. The double-barreled event will be held Tuesday, Sept. 27; 7 p. m., at the Congressional Country Club, Potomac, Md. Democrats of Western Maryland will do their celebrating at a dinner meeting, Sept. 28, at Hagerstown.

It was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt who suggested the establishment of Democratic Women's Day in 1939. Since then the event has been held on the anniversary date of women's admission to the Democratic National Committee's executive committee.

President's Truman's message will be broadcast 3 to 3:15 p. m. (EST) over networks of the American Broadcasting Company and Mutual Broadcasting System. It will be rebroadcast by transcription 5:30 to 5:45 p. m. over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

High Posts for Five Women

RECENTLY the President appointed five women to important jobs Mrs. Roosevelt was named to serve as one of the United States representatives to the United Nations' fourth General Assembly, opening September 20 at Lake Success. Since the appointment is not permanent, she must be reappointed for each session.

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Rohde, former United States Minister to Denmark, has been chosen alternate to the UN's General Assembly session.

Miss Martha B. Lucas, president of Sweet Briar College, and Mrs. Charles W. Tillett, vice-president of the Democratic National Committee, have been named by President Truman to the United States delegation to UNESCO's fourth session. Miss Lucas will be the only woman United States representative to the Paris conference, beginning September 19. Mrs. Tillett will be the only woman among 10 special advisers.

Former Congresswoman Georgia L. Lusk was appointed member of the three-member War Claims Commission.

DAR Political Scene

ELEVEN experienced politicos today joined Mrs. James B. Patton of Columbus, Ohio, in an all-out campaign to win cabinet posts in the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution. All will be Mrs. Patton's running mates in the triennial elections next April.

Currently first vice president general, Mrs. Patton announced her candidacy for president general last spring. At the time she came out as an independent candidate, no slate was chosen.

Cabinet aspirants in the race with Mrs. Patton are Mrs. Loren Edgar Rex of Wichita, Kans., for first vice president general; Mrs. Leland H. Barker, Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., for chaplain general; Mrs. Warren S. Currier Newburyport, Mass., for recording secretary general; Mrs. George D. Schermerhorn of Reading, Mich., for corresponding secretary general, and Mrs. David M. Wright of Bartow, Fla., for organizing secretary general.

Removing Food on Spoon

When food has stuck to the spoon, do not strike the spoon against the sides of the mixing bowl or pan. This is what causes all those ugly nicks in china and enamelware. Use a knife to remove this stuck portion.

Bumpy Muffin Batter

Don't worry if your muffin batter has lumps in it when you follow the standard muffin recipe; it's supposed to be bumpy. A smooth muffin batter means you have mixed too much and the hot bread will have tunnels after it is baked.

Cream cheese and currant jelly are a delicious accompaniment to crisp crackers for an easily assembled dessert. Cut the cheese into squares for individual servings and serve the jelly in tiny individual containers, if you like.

On the Move

Dumbarton Avenue Boasts Historic, Charming Homes

By Dorothy E. Boyle

Dumbarton ave. in Georgetown is one of the oldest and shortest streets with some of the oldest and prettiest houses. The name Dumbarton (or Dunbarton as it was formerly called) was taken from the original tract of land of 705 acres known as "The Rock of Dunbarton," named by Ninian Beall after a landmark in his native Scotland from which he migrated in the 1600's.

2627 DUMBARTON, owned by Mrs. Julia F. Breese, sister of Mr. Hamilton Fish, former Congressman from New York for over 25 years, was "headquarters" through the summer for Wac Major Hubbard and Wac Captain Madden. Last week it was leased to Mr. and Mrs. David H. Robinson through the office of Laura Harlan & Co. Dame Rumor reports vestiges of confetti and rice thereabouts!

2820 Dumbarton is both the home and office of Post Columnist Drew Pearson. The original house was a former shoemaker's shop but it took three houses joined together to make this rambling place with the very private garden.

THAT DELIGHTFUL OLD HOUSE at 3013 Dumbarton ave., the home of Mr. and Mrs. Welding Owen for 27 years, has just been sold to Mr. and Mrs. Adrian S. Fisher and their little daughter, Laurie. Mr. Fisher is legal adviser to the Department of State. Wait till the Fishers see their garden next spring, with those azalea bushes that measure close to 6 feet across and 7 feet high, which is most unusual for gardens this far North. Mr. and Mrs. Owen, not easily uprooted, are looking for another bit of Georgetown where Mr. Owen can put that "green thumb" to work and Mrs. Owen can display her lovely antiques. Gilliat & Co. sold this property.

3018 Dumbarton is the home of Justice Felix Frankfurter and was also the residence of Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt during her term of office as Assistant Attorney General during the Harding and Coolidge Administrations.

COMMANDER IANT L. T. HOGG of the British Navy and Mrs. Hogg, have leased an apartment at 3017 Dumbarton from Roxanna Doran.

Although the Dumbarton Avenue Methodist Church bears a cornerstone dated 1898, a plaque to the left of the entrance proudly proclaims to the world that "this church is the oldest Methodist church in the District of Columbia with a continuous ministry since December 4, 1772."

DURING THE EARLY SUMMER Maj. and Mrs. Edward Sturhahn of Centerville, Va., bought 3025 Dumbarton ave. from Miss Helen Pyles and then sold it recently to Mr. Walter Goehring, who is occupying it. This sale was made through the office of J. McKenney Berry & Son, in cooperation with Roxanna Doran.

So many lovely homes, so little space to sing the praises of the owners who have given them such special care through the years! 3010, the home of Mrs. Mildred Peacock who has restored a number of Georgetown houses; the James William Bryans at 3038; the Lawrence Bakers at 3040; the Richard Claiborne Durhams at 3077 and many others. . . .

WHAT AN INTERESTING HERITAGE goes with the property of Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Harkness at 3035 Dumbarton. In a little less than 150 years there have been but four owners. Something of a record in Georgetown! Built in 1804 by William Beall, later owned by Capt. Brenton Boggs, paymaster of the U. S. Navy who went to Japan with Admiral Peary in 1853, it was next owned by Congressman John Small of North Carolina, who sold it to the Harknesses in 1945 through the office of Harriet Holther. Known for many years as the Boggs' Place, it was christened Lacy Gables by the Smalls, and the name, so suitable for its Victorian "front" is retained by the new owners. Now the Harknesses have acquired the adjoining property, at 3037, which gives them an enviable frontage of 180 feet on the avenue itself and approximately a half an acre in the heart of old Georgetown. 3037 has been leased to Col. and Mrs. Charles W. Kerwood, who have recently returned from Japan, where Colonel Kerwood was liaison officer for the U. S. Army on exports.

3123 Dumbarton was built by Henry Foxall in the early 1800's for his daughter, Mary Ann, who married Samuel McKenney. Foxall's great-grandmother, the late Mrs. Edith A. McCartney inherited this lovely old house and the present owner is Mr. Kenyon C. Colton, who is an attache at our embassy in Paris. During the Bolton's absence from Georgetown the house will be occupied by Assistant Secretary of State George W. Perkins and Mrs. Perkins.

Retailers Smiling Again

New Buying Surge Is Healthy Sign

NEW YORK, Sept. 17 (AP).—Retailers are smiling and business is better because you have started to buy.

And it's about time, too. Merchants looking back on the summer of this year will tell you it has been rough going. Nothing like depression days, of course, but rough enough to cause concern. Department store sales are running consistently below last year, when a lot of record high volumes were being set. But at the moment things are a lot better than they were a few months ago.

Retailers aren't alone in listening to the ring of the cash register. Manufacturers and distributors also are hopeful that this start in fall buying will carry through. If it does, it's a good sign that the Nation's economy is pretty healthy. If it doesn't, it will serve as a warning signal to all that the country's conversion from war to peace still has some distance to travel.

High Volume Predicted

But the bets are down that it will carry through and build up to a high enough volume to compare favorably with any year you want to name.

All the present dither over what is going to happen to retail trade started back in the early part of this year when it appeared that all was not well with business in general.

Many important indexes turned down. Steel production started sliding from its terrific operating pace of more than 100 per cent of rated capacity. The stock market inched lower and lower in a continuation of its jittery mood heightened by the surprise of President Truman's election.

And retail trade dropped into the doldrums, too. Easter trade was a big disappointment to department stores. There were a lot of explanations then—a late Easter as compared with a year ago, bad weather, people holding off because of the expectation of lower prices.

Things didn't get any better, and that caused plenty of belt tightening. The sequence of events went like this—you didn't buy from the retailer, he didn't buy from the distributor, and he in turn didn't buy from the manufacturer. And that caused the manufacturer to put the heat on the producer of his raw materials.

The result was reduced inventories all the way along the line. The retailer bought only slightly ahead of his requirements and only what he saw a ready market for.

Prices Had to Come Down

Well, what happened? A great many prices had to come down and a lot of selling had to be done before customers resumed their buying at retail.

Lead and batteries provided a good example. The biggest cost of a battery is lead. The war-induced peak price of lead was 21.5 cents a pound on November 1, 1948. That fell to 19.50 cents on March 8, the first break in the price. Once the price started to tumble, buying dried up. Lead users lived on their inventories. A waiting game was played by buyers to get back in at the bottom of the slide.

That bottom was hit May 12 at 12 cents a pound. The rebound started from there and buying was resumed. Lead now has been stabilized at around 15 cents for several weeks, and buying is considered normal.

Battery makers found their own wares moving into retail channels in much the same fashion at lower prices.

Retailers and department stores have had similar experience on a broader scale. When consumer buying faded late this spring and early summer, retailers went to work.

They did several things. One of the first was to shade their prices. On average the cuts may appear to be small, but there was many a retailer who moved out excess stock at a loss, better to do that than be caught with old stock that wouldn't sell later at all.

Lew Hahn Sums Up

Lew Hahn, president of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, summed it up in these comments: "Business can be made good. The public is ready to do business—at a price. If the year 1949 thus far has shown us anything, it is that the people are tired of high prices, and those stores which can offer sound values will get their business."

Along with lower prices, merchants dusted off their prewar selling methods. Liberal installment selling, no down payments, layaways, tie-ins, trade-ins, slightly concealed discounts, special promotions of low-priced leaders—all of those tried and true sales boosters were used.

That ate into inventories so much that right now there is a buying boomlet to stock the stores for fall. Some manufacturers are warning that retailers better hurry with their orders. Manufacturers' own inventories were worked down this summer and they may not be able to fill retailers' orders in full.

Retailers aren't worried. Their own inventories are what they call comfortable, a little under a year ago in a lot of lines. They are buying a little further ahead than before.

They feel confident their business on its present reformed basis is starting to reflect the end of vacations, the start of school and the cool weather. More important, they feel the public is returning to normal buying habits, and normally this is the time for business to pick up after a summer lull.

...Live in Nylon

Nylon is modern magic. It's fantastic that something composed of elements of earth and air can both clothe us and help furnish our houses.

I wonder how many of you realize that today we can dress completely in nylon except for warm coats and shoes. On the outside, we have nylon raincoats and umbrellas. Then nylon dresses in the smartest new fabrics as ripple taffetas and satins and sheers; nylon blouses and nylon sweaters.

Underneath we wear nylon tricot or crepe slips; nylon petticoats; nylon bras, nylon girdles, nylon panties and nylon stockings, of course. Finally, to bed in nylon too—in a nylon nightie and a housecoat to match.

And Gets Style, Too

Average Woman Pays Under $25 for Dress

By Peggy Preston

STATISTICS, in their cool, calculating manner have a way of telling a story all their own. And in this case, if the figures don't lie, they have an interesting tale to spin.

Did you know, for instance, that more than 50,000,000 American women (three-fourths of our feminine population) will wear dresses this winter that cost $25 and under? That is the estimate of the New York Dress Institute, an organization that works for the promotion of an industry that ranks as the No. 1 in both New York City and State.

The Institute has also passed along the data that the annual dollar volume of women's clothing is about $8 billion at retail, divided roughly, as follows:

1.	Dresses	$1,721,000,000
2.	Coats and suits	1,698,657,000
3.	Hats	780,000,000
4.	Shoes	1,780,000,000
5.	Hosiery	825,000,000
6.	Lingerie	800,000,000
7.	Furs	350,000,000
	Total	$7,954,657,000

From all this we gathered that contrary to popular belief, the dress, not the suit, is the basic garment in the American woman's wardrobe. Also, while all of us dream of high-fashion creations, the great majority of us put no more than $25 on the line for a dress.

But what the Institute forgot to report was that we expect style plus value for our precious dollars. Even for an outlay of $9.95 we've come to expect the latest in line if not in quality and durability. And we get it, too, thanks to the inventiveness of a fashion industry that is outclassing any in the world.

For specific proof we turned our attention to the local scene, searching out the type of dresses that carry price tags of $25 and under. We found scores of them, just as the statistics said we would, and the majority of them live up to the best standards of America's giant mass production methods. Today, in the accompanying photographs we show you two we consider outstanding. In the next week we hope to give you other pictures of noteworthy costumes, well styled and well priced—at $25 or less.

Wallpaper Book Is Color Aid

By Ann Pringle

MIXING paint colors in your head is as hard for most people as trying to do difficult mental arithmetic. And it's a problem that crops up every time your house or your apartment or your room is to get painted.

"I'd like a sort of an azure blue, but deeper, maybe with some green in it, or a little gray," you murmur, as the painter surveys you doubtfully. If he doesn't get the shade you wanted, it's no wonder.

One good way to show the painter just what you want—and, incidentally, to introduce yourself to colors you might never have thought of—is to obtain a small sample book of plain ground wallpapers from a good wallpaper firm.

Several firms put out these little books of all the stock colors on which their designs are printed. You'll find varying shades of a great many hues to choose from.

Picking the wall color from your fabric or rug is another way to be fairly certain of what you'll end up with. When redecorating, it's always best to choose fabrics and rugs first. You can get paint mixed to match any shade, but it's not so easy to find fabrics to harmonize with a wall color.

If you are artistically inclined you will probably enjoy taking out paints and mixing up some colors of your own. If you plan to paint the room yourself, there are some water-mix paints that you can buy and blend yourself, to get any hue desired.

Rayon, Glass Fabric Pass Test

What curtain fabrics stand up longest against the ravages of sunlight or heat from radiator or register?

A study just finished by the United States Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics indicates that the most durable materials are acetate rayon and glass fabric—a comparatively new fabric woven of tiny glass rods.

Silk, nylon, and plastics were the fabrics most weakened by light, and linen and nylon by heat. Twenty-seven different materials suitable for curtains and draperies were tested, explains Dr. Hazel M. Fletcher, textile physicist. They were in various weaves. However, says Dr. Fletcher, it's the fiber and not the way it's woven that determines the way it stands up under light and heat.

In the tests, plastic film—plastic material made without a woven background—became stronger when exposed to heat, but became stiff at the same time.

The acetate and glass fabrics which withstood heat and light well exhibited another desirable feature by retaining their whiteness better than the other materials. The only glass fabric tested was white. This material is often not satisfactory in colors because the color fades in laundering or dry cleaning, says the physicist.

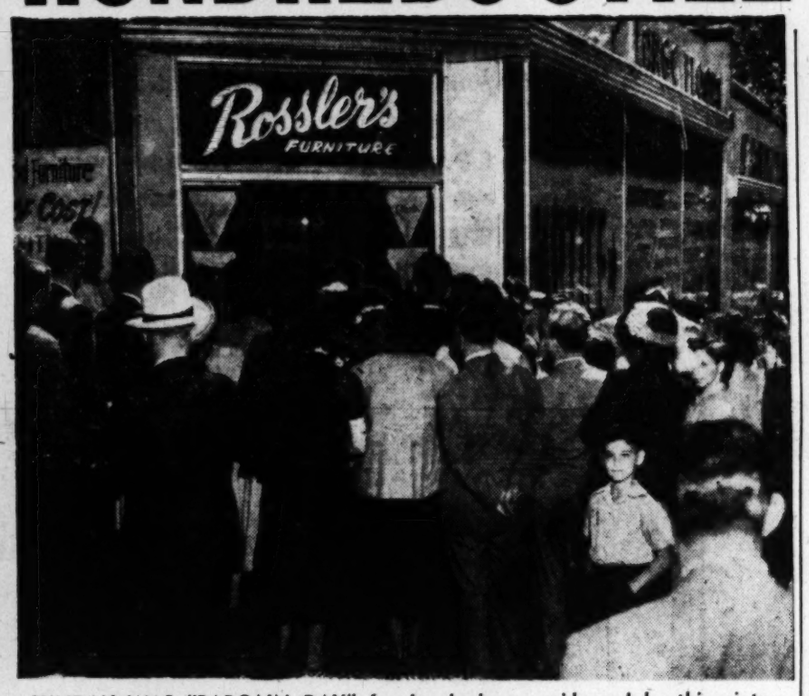
Rossler Extra — 2543 14th street, at Euclid n.w. — Rossler Extra

HUNDREDS STILL CROWDING ROSSLERS



SUNDAY WAS "BARGAIN DAY" for hundreds, as evidenced by this picture of part of the tremendous crowds waiting for Rossler's Doors to open. In spite of it being Sunday, people turned out in droves to get in on some of the most collosal Furniture Values ever offered.

Bargain-hungry throngs continue to flock to the greatest Furniture Sale Washington has seen!

The corner of 14th and Euclid Streets Northwest has taken on all the spectacle of an overcrowded sideshow, and if things continue seats will have to be provided for the foot-weary and tired—stretchers for the exhausted and slightly wounded. For all week long crowds, yes, throngs have been pushing, scratching, kicking and otherwise mobbing their way into what at the moment is the most over-crowded place in Washington—Rossler's Furniture Store.

STORE OPENS ON SUNDAY!

It all started last Sunday, September 11th, when Rossler opened his doors promptly at 1:00 P.M. to officially commence his now famous Discontinuance Sale of all Period Furniture. What greeted him was a block-long throng of what at first appeared to be normal Washington citizens but later turned out to be bargain-crazy hunters bent on grabbing up everything in sight. People went stark-raving mad over the outlandish bargains they found there and in no time flat everything on display was sold out. This, in spite of the fact that it was Sunday and most people like to stay at home, relax and indulge in recreation and the like.

SALE CONTINUES, WITH REPLENISHING STOCKS FROM WAREHOUSE

Naturally, scores were disappointed at missing out on the phenomenal values, but luckily they got a new lease on this "bargain life." Rossler couldn't begin to load his showrooms with all of his Period Furniture during one Sale day. So all week long the entire Rossler staff has been kept busy removing sold merchandise, drawing on warehouse stocks for replenishing, restocking the showrooms, continuing a never ending cycle. And all week long crowds have been flocking to Rossler's buying up everything on the floors almost before they were unloaded and put in place. And they're still coming—there seems to be no end to Washington's bargain-hungry population.

FURNITURE VALUES NEVER BEFORE HEARD OF!

The values at this sale, as we said before, are really phenomenal. Never has Furniture of any type taken such a price beating as the Furniture now being practically "given away" at Rossler. In the first place, this is Period Furniture, to many the most treasured furniture of all. In addition, this is Rossler period furniture, to all Washington the most valued and distinctive Period Furniture available. At any price, every piece is a creation achievement. At the price tags Rossler is hanging on them, these are values never to be found again anywhere! Small wonder then that all Washington is astirr with Rossler's "Bargain Fever." If you haven't as yet made your prized selections, if up to now you've missed out or if you would like to "get more" of these outlandish values, be sure and be at Rossler's bright and early (9:00 A.M.) Monday. There are still plenty of warehouse merchandise that must be disposed of and the Sale continues till every last one is gone, but these are values never-before heard of and you can bet that they won't last long—so if you want to make the furniture buys of your life get to Rossler's early!

OPEN EVENINGS 'TIL 9 FOR PLEASANT EVENING'S SHOPPING

Night owls? Well maybe so, but Rossler believes the most delightful shopping hours are between 6 and 9 in the evening. Then you've eaten, rested and can spend time with the salesman and furniture and make choices wisely. You enjoy what you buy when you buy leisurely. That's why Rossler's doors never close before 9 p.m. (except Saturdays, when they close at 6) and you'll enjoy your shopping much more, especially after touring Rossler's remarkable showrooms.

Delivery Trucks "On the Double!"

It's been a tough week for Rossler's delivery trucks. They've been hard put to keep up that steady pace caused by the tremendous purchases customers have been making. Every Rossler truck (and some that aren't Rossler's) is doing double, if not triple duty. It's tough and rough on trucks and men alike, but they're holding up splendidly. Bonus? As one driver put it, "Just back to a schedule of 10 to 15 deliveries a day will be bonus enough for me!"

Salesman, How About the Rug?

One Lady customer, not quite satisfied with her purchase of a living room suite alone, liked the showroom setting so well she wanted to buy the rug along with it. Another lady buyer just couldn't believe her ears and eyes: "You mean this is only ——?" she asked over and over again. Even after she had it safely in her car, she couldn't get over her miraculous purchase.

Scores of people waited hopefully by "sold" articles, hoping the purchasers would change their minds so "they" could buy their chosen one, but they waited in vain. This was one time when few people changed their minds.

ROSSLER TELLS ALL!

Milton H. Rossler, president of the firm bearing his name, has quite outdone himself. "Course, I expected a rush of customers," he says, "look at the values I'm offering—but I never dreamed the response would be anything like this. It's terrific."

But why is he doing this Why is he actually suffering losses in some cases; haven't discriminating Washingtonians been paying him top prices for his unusual period furniture creations for years? Yes, but as Rossler puts it, "The trend is to modern; furniture shows all over the country demonstrate it—the tastes and inklings of my customers indicate it. I have here some of the nicest, most attractive showrooms anyone could wish for. I want to see them "showing off" new, all new modern furniture. The unusual, different—the dynamic, ultra modern—furniture that Washington has never seen or imagined, but should see—that's what I want to bring in my showrooms. So I've got to sell out everything I have here, to make room for my Modern. Sounds quite simple, doesn't it? But it's still quite miraculous to thousands who've seen and bought Rossler's wonderful Period Furniture.

They're still mumbling, "How does he DO it?"

Sale Still Going On

Don't forget, this great sale is going on—right now—with the same outlandish bargains. Don't wait until the last minute, risking disappointment or "left-over's"; come early this week and make the most sensational furhiture purchases you've ever made. Remember, when these exclusive Rossler period Furniture are gone, there just won't be any more—the opportunity for you to get yours is early this week. Next week may be too late.

TALK ABOUT CROWDED!—There was hardly room enough for the Furniture, as shown by this picture taken inside Rossler's during the height of the Discontinuance Sale last Sunday. It was Customers' Day all way around, and Washington ate it up.

Preview of Tomorrow!

Speaking of Modern, you'll want to see one of the Exhibit Homes of '49, completely decorated and Furnished in Modern by Rossler. Located in the Colonial Investment development on Dexter Avenue in Silver Spring, Maryland, this Rossler Furnished home has been drawing hundreds of people, who are getting a preview of tomorrow's Modern as reflected in the liberal use of color and dramatic furniture design. See it and you'll get a bird's eye view of what Rossler's new, Modern store has in store for you.

Ask Anne

I have a very nice powder compact of which I am very fond. Unfortunately, I dropped it on the floor the other day and broke the glass. It is not very valuable, being made of some metal that looks like gold, but isn't. I should very much like to get it repaired. Where could I get that done in this town? Secondly, could you tell me what I could clean it with? The surface is smooth and shiny and shows and keeps fingerprints very easily. I shall be very grateful to have your advice. L.

Repair departments of jewelry stores can sometimes replace compact mirrors. If it is a nationally known make they will send it back to the factory for replacement. It is necessary for them to see the compact before they can tell you if it can be repaired and what the cost would be.

A good paste metal polish with a mild abrasive in it should clean the compact satisfactorily.

Information is requested as to the address of an individual concern in the Washington area who specializes in the removal of tattooing. If you are unable to supply this information will you please refer me to somebody who might know? O. M. F.

Some dermatologists will remove tattooing. Since the method used and the success of the procedure depends upon the extent of the tattooing, the only way to find out whether yours can be successfully removed is to discuss it with the doctor. One skin specialist in the city who was recommended by the Medical Exchange and who has had experience in the removal of tattooing can be reached by calling District 7577. Ask for the dermatologist.

This is the first year I have done any home canning, and even though I have the Government bulletins on the subject there are still several questions I would like for you to answer if you can:

1. Does overprocessing mean the food is ruined? For example, I inadvertently overprocessed some corn about an hour.

2. In using self-seal lids for pickling, the tops do not pop down, although the seal seems good. Does this mean they should be recanned?

3. My canned peaches have already started to discolor, even though I followed directions to the letter and had good seals on all jars. I did not use any ascorbic acid to prevent this. Is this necessary?

I do hope this is in your realm, as I haven't been able to find satisfactory answers anywhere.

J. E. H.

Overprocessing will soften, discolor, and possibly change the flavor of corn. It would not be harmful to eat it, but it will not be as appetizing as corn which was processed the correct length of time.

If the food shows no signs of spoilage, i. e., formation of gas bubbles inside of the jar resulting in leaking at the seal, in four days to a week after canning, you can safely assume that the seal is good. Many experienced canners leave freshly canned food in the kitchen where it can be daily observed for several days as an added check on the seals. If watched closely when a seal is not right and food begins to show signs of spoilage, you can immediately open the jar, bring the contents to a boil, and in most cases it is all right to use immediately to avoid waste.

Ascorbic acid is recommended to prevent discoloration in freezing peaches. It is not necessary to use it to prevent discoloration when canning them.

About Repairing Broken Glass in Compact

Canned peaches will discolor at the top of the jar if they are not completely covered with juice or if they have been overprocessed. Discolored peaches are not harmful, but as in the case of the corn, they are not as palatable as those with lovely natural color.

Juice cooks out of the jar during processing, leaving some peaches uncovered if the jar is filled to the very top when juice is added and before the lid is put on adding juice you should al inch air space at the top fo ing. Overprocessing may cause less of liquid from th

Eyes of School Children Need Defect Tests

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 17.—Approximately one in five children in the United States going to school this month will be handicapped in his education by defective eyesight unless the defect is discovered and corrected, according to Dr. Franklin M. Foote, executive director of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness. The society calls attention to the need for periodic examination of the eyes of school children because of the serious results from neglect of vision defects.

"Since more than 80 per cent of modern education is visual," Dr. Foote said, "the importance of good eyesight cannot be overestimated. Ideally, before a child enters school for the first time he should have a careful examination by his own eye doctor, and this should be repeated at regular intervals throughout life. Early recognition of eye disease is a great help in preventing loss of vision.

"Correction of such common conditions as farsightedness, astigmatism and nearsightedness enables the child to gain the greatest possible benefit from his schooling and to enjoy his recreational opportunities. Boys and girls with crossed eyes not only may become extremely sensitive and self-conscious, but often lose the power of vision in the deviating eye unless treated in early childhood.

"To discover the more serious eye defects, many schools now carry out a screening test of vision. An evaluation of these various tests is being sponsored by the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness and the Children's Bureau of the Federal Security Agency. But parents everywhere should be alert to notice signs or symptoms of eye trouble among their own children and should arrange indicated eye care without delay."

Gridiron, Social Events Keep Academy Busy

ANNAPOLIS, MD., Sept. 17.—The Naval Academy varsity football squad, which is now engaged in scrimmage practice, is scheduled to leave by plane for the West Coast on September 21 to open its nine-game schedule for this autumn with Southern California in Los Angeles on September 24.

The Naval Academy Superintendent's new administrative aide is Capt. William G. Fisher, former Chief of Staff of Commander Service Force of the Atlantic Fleet. Captain Fisher will also carry the title, Chief of Staff to the Commandant of the Severn River Naval Command. He relieves Capt. Richard F. Stout, who has returned to his duties as head of the Naval Academy's department of seamanship and navigation.

Captain and Mrs. Fisher are living on Upshur road, in the Naval Academy reservation. They have two sons, William G., who is a midshipman, third class, at the Naval Academy, and John W.

A delightful tea marked the first monthly gathering of the season of wives of members of the Naval Academy class of 1943 now stationed in this area. The party was held September 7 at the Officers' Club, and was attended by some 70 wives, including a number of new arrivals in Annapolis. Hostesses for the occasion were Mrs. L. Lavrakas and Mrs. Richard Law.

Tau Omicron Phi Sorority members have resumed their regular weekly meetings each Tuesday night at Alumni House. The group is making plans for another of their jamborees to be held soon. Miss Dorothy Emery is president of the local chapter.

Lieut. and Mrs. Robert L. Livingston of St. Margaret's entertained at an informal party Tuesday in honor of the anniversary of Mrs. Livingston's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frederick Panetti, jr., of Bay Lodge, Greenbury Point. The occasion also marked Mrs. Panetti's birthday.

One of the outstanding parties of the Labor Day weekend was given by Col. James A. Stuart, USMC, and Mrs. Stuart of Edgewater, who entertained a host of friends from 5 to 7 o'clock, September 3, at Alumni House, in Annapolis, in honor of their son, Lieut. James Stuart, USA, and his fiance, Miss Mary Hamilton Walker. The wedding of Miss Walker and Lieut. Stuart, who is stationed at Camp Campbell, Ky., took place Saturday, September 10, in Franktown, Va.

Another wedding of much interest to Annapolis society took place recently at the Appleton Chapel, Harvard University, when Miss Nancy Lane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Milton Lane, became the bride of Thomas George Wilson, son of Senior Prof. Levi Thomas Wilson, dean of the department of mathematics at the Naval Academy, and Mrs. Wilson of 20 Thompson st. The ceremony took place at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday, September 3, and was followed by a garden reception at the Belmont home of the bride's parents.

The couple will reside in Washington, where Mr. Wilson is associated with the National U. S. Naval Reserve laboratory.

The U. S. Naval Station Chapel, San Juan, Puerto Rico, was the setting on September 8 of the wedding of Miss Kathleen Conard Haff, daughter of Capt. Theodore G. Haff, USN, commanding officer of the station, and Mrs. Haff, to Rogers Morris MacMillan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald M. MacMillan of Macon, Ga. The 1 o'clock ceremony, which took place on Mrs. Haff's birthday, was followed by a reception at the quarters of the bride's parents.

The bride, who lived here for 3½ years, is the granddaughter of Rear Admiral Charles Conard of Washington and a niece of Mrs. Elmer M. Jackson, jr., of Wardour. She has numerous friends here.

Miss Louise Baldwin Rich is with her father, Edward N. Rich, jr., at Severnside Farm, following a visit in Southampton.

Keep in Trim

Extra Weight Just Happens Every Fall

By Ida Jean Kain

It happens every fall. Right after Labor Day, women of assorted sizes hurry to buy something to perk up their spirits and their wardrobe.

"What size please?" the clerk inquires politely.

Without hesitation, our model claims her regular size, 18.

"Just try these on for size," the clerk suggests, bringing in only a few dresses.

Something Wrong

Alas, after our shopper struggles into three dresses, size 18, and has to hold her breath to close the zipper, she is forced to admit something is wrong.

"Are you sure these are 18s?" she questions, hating to believe her own eyes. She wonders aloud if the dresses could be marked wrong . . . and mutters that clothes seem smaller this year, smaller through the waist and hips anyway.

When the clerk explains that the sizes are standard, our model defiantly points out that the very dress she wore into the store is a size 18, which proves that clothes are smaller this season. The saleslgirl murmurs something about seeing what she can do . . .

While she is gone, let's clear up that mystery. Clothes eventually take on the roomy contours of their owner, and obligingly stretch, in an understanding fashion. And that's why we feel comfortable in our old clothes. New garments are less partial and have less give. Standard sizes do not change—but figures sometimes do. Unfortunately, not always for the better.

Tight Squeeze at Waist

If you find your regular size 16, for example, a tight squeeze at the waist, that is a sign your waist has gone past 28 inches. If a bit of easing is required over the hips, that is proof your hips measure slightly over the 37-inch limit, standard for size 16. The specifications for a size 18 are these: Bust 36, waist 30, hips 39.

But back to our model. She firmly informs the clerk who has brought in some 20's that she will not go into a size 20 . . . that size is for older women, not for her! Besides it's ridiculous, she has never worn a size larger than an 18 in her life . . . and for years she wore a 16. She knows she has not gained that much weight . . . 5 pounds maybe, well 6¾, but a few added pounds couldn't cause her to require a whole size larger! What our model does not take into account is that she must have been crowding the size 18 last spring, and the added pounds are the last strain.

Right now, while she is incensed, she should get busy and take off those 6¾ pounds first. She will feel so fit on the right pattern of eating she will be eager to continue, bring her weight down to healthy normal and be able to slip into her rightful size 16 . . . happy day.

'Homes of '49' Attracting Vast Crowds

One Firm Reports 47 Sales; Interest High in Furniture

By Conrad P. Harness

THE "Homes of '49" housing exhibition which opened just last Sunday has already proved both a sales success and a crowd-puller. Most builders reported attendance of from 3000 to 5000 last Sunday alone, with over 10,000 at the Gunnison house at Kensington, Md.

Weekday attendance has kept up remarkably well, with reports from 100 to 1000 persons per day through different homes. Several builders are experiencing astonishing sales reactions. Merrimack Development Corp., builders of a $13,150 rambler, made their forty-seventh sale on Friday. "And we're still going strong," exclaimed Arthur Becker, firm architect and official.

Sales agents for Courembis Construction Co., sponsors of a $14,950 rambler in North Arlington, reported 13 homes sold in the 24-home development. The dwelling's full basement and built-in breakfast nook in the kitchen were vital factors in the sales success, it was reported. About 50 percent of the buyers made down payments of $5000 to $6000 cash, with the remainder financed under the conventional FHA-GI plan.

Samuel Walker, president of Walker Homes, Inc., local Gunnison home distributors, said his sales force would take orders for the $7641 2-bedroom house after negotiations were completed for a sufficient number of homesites on which the prefabricated houses would be erected. Weekday crowds of 800 per day were reported there.

"It's a heck of a complaint, but we're getting too many people," declared Joel Broyhill of Broyhill & Sons, Arlington builders. "We had hoped to show visitors through the home and explain its fine points, but our 11 salesmen were simply overwhelmed by the huge crowd last weekend." He said contracts on 14 lots in Country Club View have been signed, on which similar homes will be erected.

The Broyhill house is a large rambler priced at $21,500 and LINES, lines everywhere—even in front of the sales office! This scene is at Merrimack Development Corp.'s office off University Lane, near New Hampshire ave. Over 47 contracts had been signed for homes last week! The firm's "Home of '49" is a modern, 3-bedroom rambler selling for $13,150

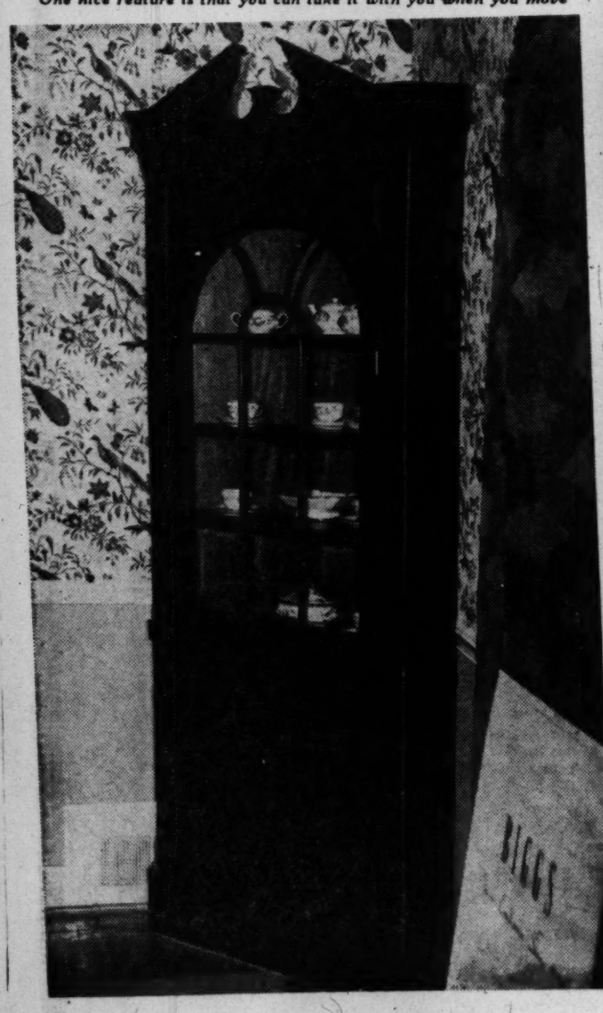
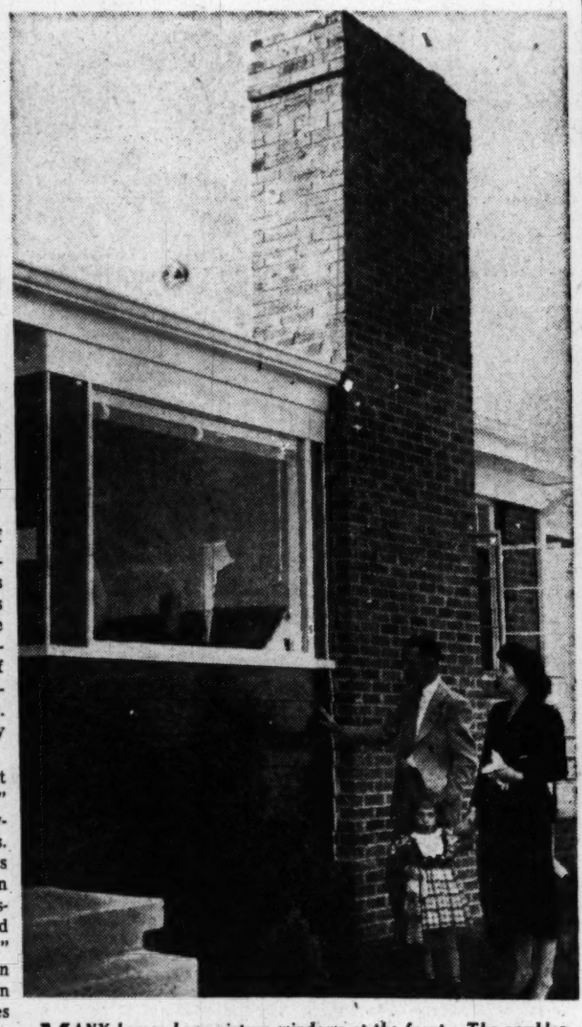
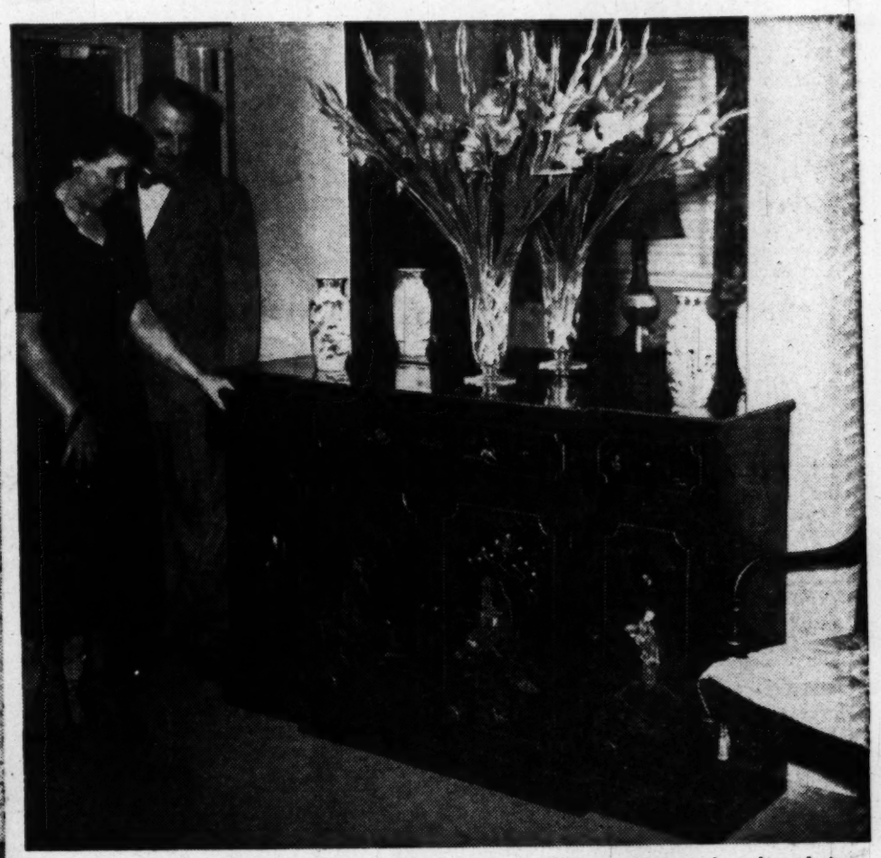
LEAVE it or take with you! We're talking about the various types of corner cabinets shown in the "Homes of '49." At top is one of the two built-in cabinets in the dining room of the W. C. & A. N. Miller house in Spring Valley, furnished by Woodward & Lothrop. Below is the hand made, solid mahogany exact copy of an old Chippendale originally made in 1750. It's in the Cooley Bros. home off River rd., tastefully furnished by Biggs. One nice feature is that you can take it with you when you move





MANY homes have picture windows at the front. The rambler built by Courembis Construction Co. in N. Arlington also boasts one at the rear. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Littell, and little daughter, Belle, 347 Jefferson ave., Alexandria, examine the redwood siding beneath the picture window. Price: $14,950



Top, this exquisite black credenza attracted raves at the Ornstein home in Greenwich Forest, Bethesda. Furnished by Corrado's, the eighteenth century style credenza is hand decorated with Chinese figurines. Admiring it are Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Smyth of 2100 Massachusetts ave. nw. Several "periods" of furnishings have been used in the home to show the residence will sparkle with modern, French Provincial or eighteenth century trappings

The Ornstein home is a 3-bedroom, 2-story of modern design, built in a subdivision of new homes featuring wide lots amidst many large shade trees. There is a powder room on the first floor plus a front and side porch. The kitchen has been placed at the front of the home, instead of the conventional rear part of the floor plan

CROWDS—did somebody say crowds! Kensington, Md., suffered its worst traffic jam in years when over 10,000 inspected the Gunnison home there last Sunday. Crowds have thinned down a bit—about 850 per day, according to Walker Homes, Inc., local Gunnison distributors. The home, duplicated on a $1000 lot, will sell for $7641, including many extras

Exciting Drapes, Colors Make A Hit

DRAPERY treatments and color combinations seem to be arousing more comment than any other decorating features of the "Homes of '49."

"The pagoda-shaped cornices used with Chinese fabric draperies in the living room always attract attention," says Jefferson Davis of Corrado's, which decorated the house built by Ornstein in Greenwich Forest, Md.

"We get lots of queries, too, about the modern drapery fabrics in the house—one in a large oakleaf pattern of beige on red and green and the other in a big chartreuse, red, and green plaid," he continued. "They speak appreciatively, too, of the 'livable' quality of the rooms."

The color scheme gets many admiring comments at the Spring Valley home decorated by Woodward & Lothrop. Besides, people always speak of the two persimmon velvet tufted love seats in the living room, says Mrs. Lois Wannan, and of the chintz-covered wall in the dining room that matches the draperies in the living room.

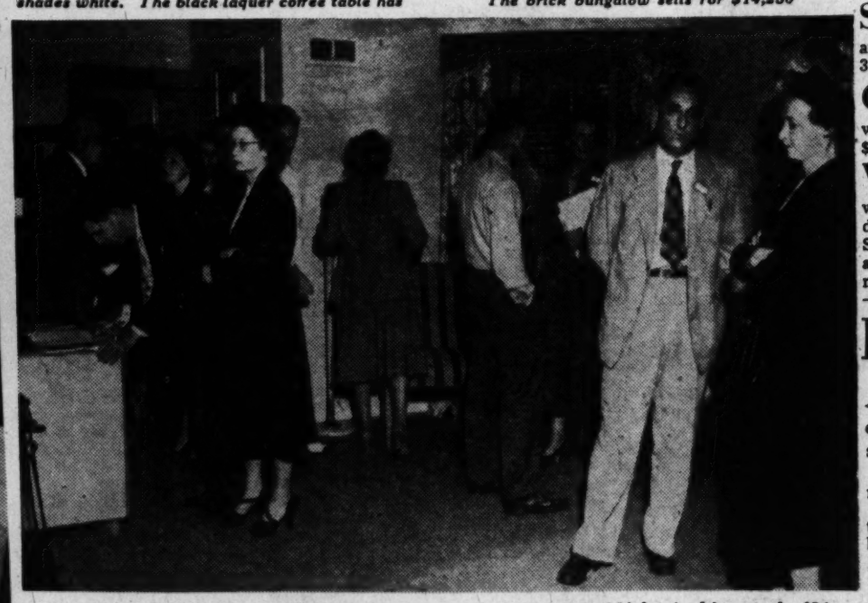
Tropical scene draperies in the den at the house on East-West hwy., built by L. E. Breuninger and decorated by P. J. Nee, draw delighted exclamations. These are keyed to a picture on the wall, Thomas Baldwin of the Nee firm points out—a modern picture of the top of a coconut tree, painted by a Washington artist.

The importance of a good choice of pictures seems to strike a lot of people as they go through this house. Original paintings by Washington artists are used throughout and keyed in beautifully with the color scheme and mood of the rooms. For variety in the living room, there's a portrait over the fireplace, two lithographs and two paintings.

People often ask store representatives for advice on drapery problems as they go through the houses. Malcolm Scates of Malcolm Scates, Inc., says they've had many requests of this kind from people who tour the Malice-Brooks rambler decorated by this store in colorful modern style in Fairfax County.

The shadow boxes in the living room of the American University Park house got the top number of comments there. They're built around two small windows on each side of the fireplace. The basement recreation room, where Decorator J. Harold Gooding used maple furniture and colorful printed draperies, also arouses much interest. William E. Miller Furniture Co. decorated this house, built by Karl W. Corby.

THIS sofa of Chinese red chenille is flanked with modern end tables designed by Maxmillian, holding Russell Wright lamps with spun plastic shades. Bases are black and gold, the shades white. The black laquer coffee table has a chartreuse leather top and holds a Chinois tree in a low bowl. Picture was taken at the home in Carroll Knolls, Md., built by Colonial Construction Co., and furnished by Milton R. Rossler. The brick bungalow sells for $14,250



AN estimated 3000 home seekers inspected the home at Country Club View, North Arlington, built by Broyhill & Sons and furnished by Miller Furniture Co., of Arlington. Situated in an area of high-priced homes, the $21,500 rambler attracted several buyers, the building firm reported. Here is part of last Sunday's crowd viewing the front room

22 Paths To House Happiness

BRIEF facts about the "Homes of '49" exhibition:

PURPOSE: To show the public the tremendous strides made by the home-building and furniture industries. Homes and furnishings on display are typical of the finest products now actually available in Washington. However, these are "down-to-earth" homes. There are no $100,000 electronic dream houses packed with untested twenty-first century gadgets.

WHERE: Exhibit homes are located in the District, Arlington and Fairfax Counties, Va.; Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, Md. A free map showing the exact location of each home, together with traffic directions, streetcar and bus routes, is published each Sunday in the real estate section of The Washington Post. Duplicate copies are available at each home or at the front counter of The Washington Post, 1337 E st. nw.

SPONSORS: Twenty-two home builders, 8 furniture dealers and The Washington Post. See page 3 for a chart of the participants.

COST OF HOMES: They range from about $7950 to $60,000, with the majority costing under $20,000.

WHEN: From now through October 2. Visiting hours on weekdays are from 2 p. m. until dark. The homes are open on Saturdays and Sundays from 10 a. m. until dark. There is no admission charge to any home.

TELEVISION sets in the furnished "Homes of '49" attracted great attention. This new RCA-Victor model with the raised screen attracted raves at the L. E. Breuninger home furnished by the P. J. Nee Co. The $23,500 rambler is located at 4104 Edgevale Terrace, off East-West hwy. The set retails for slightly under $800. Looking it over are Capt. and Mrs. J. M. Smith, and daughter Jo-Ann, of 4847 South 28th st., Arlington

Furniture Business Is Booming

A CONSTANT stream of telephone queries and visitors is flowing into the local stores that decorated the "Homes of '49" as a result of the show.

"Can I get your decorator to come out and give me some advice?" is a frequent query.

Such questions as "Have you more fabric like the draperies in your living room?" and "Can I buy end tables like the ones in your model house?" are always answered in the affirmative, for the stores were careful to furnish the homes with articles actually in stock or obtainable for customers. They all have representatives at the houses to answer on-the-spot questions.

Charming antique knick-knacks, such as the wig stand, lamps and pictures in the living room, are bringing many callers to the Biggs Antique Co. Corrado's, Inc., reports a large business in tables and lamps as a result of the exhibit.

William E. Miller Furniture Co. notes many queries about the "television" chairs on a rotating base in its model home. Woodward & Lothrop says traffic in all its departments having to do with home furnishings has been greatly accelerated. Milton Rossler, Inc., though it's having a period furniture sale, reports many inquiries about the modern furniture used in its house.

Miller Furniture Co. of Arlington, P. J. Nee, and Malcolm Scates, Inc., all speak of the stepped-up interest in modern furniture and draperies as a result of the show. All three firms decorated their "Homes of '49" strictly in the modern manner.

Freedom Near From Home Chores

WITH THE MYRIAD of automatic gadgets now available to home makers, the emancipation of Mrs. America from household drudgery is fast becoming a reality. Electrical appliances can be obtained to do her laundry, wash and dry her dishes and perform practically every laborious chore but keeping Junior's face clean.

One task which has become particularly simple is the maintenance of attractive hardwood floors. For polishing, the homemaker can buy or rent at nominal rates a polishing machine which does the job in a jiffy and involves a minimum of physical effort.

Should years of wear or neglect begin to affect the appearance of an old oak floor, the original natural beauty of the wood can be restored easily. It is not necessary to scrape off the old finish by hand. The job can be done by machine, as can subsequent sanding and buffing operations recommended to eradicate spots and scratches and to renew the mirror-smooth surface of the weed.

Most polishing machines nowadays are adaptable for all these operations. Modern floor seal finishes can be mopped on quickly with a long-handled applicator which eliminates the need for stooping.

As for routine maintenance, hardwood floors never did require the frequent and vigorous scrubbings which some fastidious homemakers once insisted on giving them. It has been found, in fact, that the old-fashioned soap and water treatment was all wet in more ways than one. Experts point out that water, if used often, may raise the grain of the wood and cause a rough surface. It may also mar the finish.

Step-Saving Kitchens Featured

Homes Project Being Completed

A project of 24 semidetached, 1½-bath, all-brick homes is nearing completion by Morris Pollin & Sons, Inc., at Kansas ave. and Sheridan st. ne., just off upper New Hampshire ave. It is the last group of 132 similar homes built by the firm in the area since the war.

Residences were designed by Berla & Abel, architects, along modern lines, with sharp, clear lines, flat roofs and a roof overhang. The floor plan has three bedrooms and bath up, equipped kitchen and full basement, according to Sidney Z. Mensh, agent. The homes sell from $12,250 to $12,850. The Pollin firm plans a similar group in another location.

Canada Seeks to Save Woods

Montreal, Sept. 18 (U.P.).—A determined effort to rescue Canada's forestry industry from disaster while doubling its value within the next 50 years has begun.

Lumbermen, foresters and nature-lovers, apprehensive over seeing millions of hewn logs churning down the swift rivers of Ontario, British Columbia, Quebec and Newfoundland with few ever replaced, mapped plans for turning Canada's timber-rich woodlands into a two-billion-dollar business.

Banded together as the Canadian Forestry Association, they listed two steps that could be taken to increase the yield of timber while allowing reforestation to begin replacing the vast stump-covered areas with new crops of trees.

Building of new roads would divert the attention of loggers from immature stands close at hand to mature ones farther afield. New planting could take place on 1,590,000 acres of waste land, the association explained.

20-Room Colross House At Princeton Is Sold

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 17—Colross House, which was built in Alexandria, Va., in 1799 and transported and reconstructed brick by brick in Princeton, N. J., has been sold, according to Previews, Inc., marketing agents. Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Smith, jr., of Trenton bought it from the Matthews Construction Co., which erected the building in Princeton in 1929.

The 20-room house, of Federal Georgian architecture, was built of handmade bricks. These original bricks, the interior pine paneling, mantels, stairrail, elaborate moldings, paneled doors and fanlight dormer windows, and some of the old locks and hardware have been carefully preserved in the rebuilt residence.

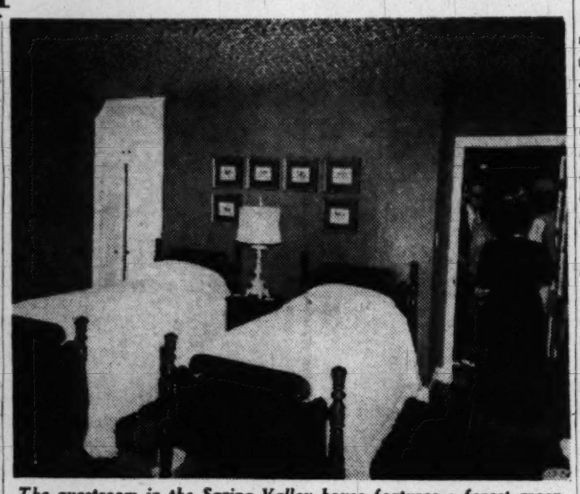
Personality Brought to Home By Widespread Use of Colors

By Lucia Brown

COLORS give personality to a house . . . warm, clear colors that welcome and delight you . . . bright, gay colors that lift the spirits . . . pale, soft shades that soothe the soul.

So it's color that has been given precedence in planning the interiors of the model houses in the "Homes of '49" exhibit. To illustrate, let's consider in detail the Spring Valley home built by W. C. and A. N. Miller and decorated by Woodward and Lothrop.

Here the fall colors forecast by House and Gardens magazine are featured—such shades as avocado, kingfisher blue, carnation pink, willow green, and citron. Lois Wannan, home furnishings coordinator, has used them in eye-filling combinations, keyed one room to the other with color in an exciting way.



The guestroom in the Spring Valley house features a forest green and white color scheme with accents of citron yellow and cherry red. Note the ceiling covered with wallpaper in a cherry pattern. Walls are forest green, linings of th closet citron

Kingfisher blue, gray, Celadon green and persimmon are the colors in this gracious and liveable room. It's in the "Home of '49" in Spring Valley, decorated by Woodward and Lothrop and built by W. C. and A. N. Miller. The young lady is Mary Elinor Griffith, of Woodward's decorating department

Chintz on Wall

KINGFISHER blue is the wall color that forms a background in hall and living room. Woodwork is off-white and carpeting French gray. Draperies are chintz—a rose pattern in kingfisher and Celadon, a light green. The same chintz is used on a wing chair, while persimmon red velvet covers two loveseats beside the fireplace.

This same color highlight appears in striped occasional chairs, where persimmon is used with green and gray. All lamps are white except a Chinese one with persimmon porcelain base. Brass andirons and other accessories in this bright metal give accent.

Across the hall in the dining room, the same green-and-blue chintz covers the upper part of the wall instead of wallpaper. Woodwork is French gray except for Celadon green inside the corner cupboards. Furniture is mahogany eighteenth century, with leaf green upholstery. The persimmon shade is featured in the floral arrangement on the table.

Pink, Green Drapes

KINGFISHER blue turns up as a color accent for pillows and other small articles in the study. Here walls are chocolate brown, woodwork French gray, and upholstery a deeper shade of gray.

Willow green, carnation pink, and maderia, a wine shade, are the three colors in the master bedroom upstairs. Walls and French Louvre rug are green, sheer draperies pink and green. A documentary print on the chaise longue and dust ruffles for the twin beds are in the three colors, with emphasis on maderia.

The young girl's bedroom next door is in carnation pink, willow green and beige, pink being the predominant shade. Walls and striped loveseat are pink and rug green. Antique white French provincial furniture is used. Curtains are white organdy and sheer white eyelet covers the bed with green satin spread underneath.

IN THE guest room, walls are dark forest green, woodwork and linen curtains white. Citron yellow and cherry red are the color accents, seen in wallpaper that covers the ceiling with a cherry print. Lamp shades and closet lining are citron.

A bedroom for the young man of the family is papered in a copper shade and the floor covered in avocado, a muted green. Draperies and chair upholstery are a metallic plaid in moss green, and the bedspread is copper corduroy.

Even the attic apartment goes in for beautiful colors. Bedroom and sitting room walls are citron, upholstery chocolate brown. A bookcase painted persimmon is a bright accent. Maple furniture and brass Tole lamps are used in these rooms, designed for servants' quarters.

Test Tube Timber Is Newest Material for Home Building

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., Sept. 17 (U.P.).—A Brooklyn inventor said today he's developed a process for building houses out of sawdust.

In only 10 to 12 minutes, said Chairman Donald F. Othmer of Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute's chemical engineering department, he can convert sawdust and shavings into "first quality new wood."

Othmer told an international conference of wallboard makers at Harvard University that his laboratory lumber is even better than regular wood in some respects.

His test tube timber, he said, is "resistant to termites, rot, moisture, swelling and shrinking."

Othmer, who said fabrication of wallboard by his process began this week in London, England, disclosed the secret of his woodmaking was a "cheap, readily available" chemical.

Without revealing the name of the substance, he said, a small amount of it is mixed with dry wood waste. The concoction then is placed in a hydraulic press equipped with multiple heated plates which can make 10 to 20 boards at a time.

"In a matter of from 10 to 12 minutes, the boards are formed and discharged to cool," Othmer said.

They Blow the House Up

Bad Kissingen, Germany (AP).—The district president of Kissingen urgently needed money to build houses for refugees. State funds were exhausted, so he got the 30 mayors of his district together and formed a band, consisting mostly of trombones and trumpets. This mayor's band plays in all towns to collect funds.

They have already blown enough for one house.

Home Show Slated for October 8-16

DATES for the third annual Washington Home Show-Exposition, sponsored by the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, at the National Guard Armory were officially set yesterday for October 8-16, inclusive.

President William S. Banks at the same time announced that James W. Pearson has been appointed for the second straight season as executive director of the exposition, which since its inception has attracted more than 200,000 persons to the huge Armory.

Pearson, who joined the Home Builders Association in 1947 as assistant director, is a native of Kentucky and a graduate of Georgetown School of Foreign Service. He served as sales promotion manager in the fields of food manufacturing, importing and financial advertising. During World War II he was public relations officer at Fort Francis E. Warren, Wyo., and chief of the Intelligence Section of the United States Strategic Bombing Survey in London, Paris and Bad Nauheim.

Regarded as one of the biggest expositions of its kind in the Nation, next month's home show will offer hundreds of booth displays, with the very latest developments in home construction, equipment, furnishing and decorations.

A number of contests in which thousands of dollars in prizes and equipment will be given away will be among the highlights of the afternoon and night shows. Hours will be from 2:30 p. m. to 10:30 p. m.

One of the more interesting features will be a dahlia show sponsored by the National Capital Dahlia Society.

Judges at the Home Show's "Television Queen" contest face an entertaining night. First three beauties to enter were, left to right, Galen Lindsey, 20, of 3918 Ingomar st. nw.; Gracie Johnson, 18, of Ashton, Md., and Mara Lindsey, Galen's twin sister. They'll be screened Monday night on the WNBW Johnny Bradford show, and then will display their talents and beauty at the Home Builders Show at the National Guard Armory, Oct. 8-16. Any local girl between 18 and 30 can enter the contest. Entry blanks are avaliable at 1757 K st. nw.

Southwest's Quail Get to Idaho

Boise, Idaho (AP).—Idaho has some unusual vistors from the deserts of the Southwest. They're Gambel quail. State Bird Supervisor Maurice Lundy wonders how the plump, fast desert birds got so far from their normal range. He says they are supposed to be non-migatory and are not native to Idaho.

Five coveys of 125 Gambels were reported in the Lemhi drainage and others were said to have been seen in Owyhee County. The birds provide some of the best shooting in the extreme Southwest. The Idaho game department hopes that those in this State will stay and multiply.

India Plans New Coins for 1950

New Delhi (AP).—The government has tentatively decided that free India's new coins will bear the design of three lions on the Asoka pillar in place of the King's head.

The reverse of the coins will bear ears of corn, a peacock and the Asoka bull. The new coins will be put into circulation after India proclaims herself a republic January 26, 1950. The first set of coins to be minted will be formally presented to the president of the Indian republic in a public ceremony.

Six Prizes to Be Given

Search Starts for Best Housing

A SEARCH is under way for the best neighborhoods and housing projects in the country.

With the idea of encouraging the best in building, the National Association of Home Builders has sponsored its second annual neighborhood development contest. National prizes will be given in six classifications of home building ranging from small projects of economy houses to complete community developments and garden apartment projects. Winning entries will be displayed at the 1950 convention of the NAHB in Chicago next February.

Two local building firms won prizes in the same contest last year. They were the W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co., developer of Spring Valley, Wesley Heights and Sumner. The other winner was Standard Properties, developer of Eastpines, large housing project in East Riverdale, Md.

"Modern home building has come a long way in recent years," NAHB said in announcing the contest. "Today, the builder and developer takes into account the planning of a whole neighborhood so that it has enduring values built into it.

"This includes good site planning: proper recognition of topographical conditions; the best layout of streets; the presence of community facilities such as shops, schools and transportation, and the other things that make for good American living. Also required is sound architectural planning of the house and its equipment.

"It is these factors that make the best American homes. The contest is frankly designed to encourage the best kind of building by giving recognition to builders and developers who produce outstanding homes and neighborhoods. The winning developments will naturally set the pattern for our future neighborhoods."

The contest takes into account not only large developments but also the best possible use of small groups of lots where street patterns have already been established.

A Lovely Home for a Family That Can Afford Good Living

A distinctive Colonial brick on a fine level lot, set amid carefully selected shrubbery, with inviting recessed doorway into a spacious central hall. A generously sized living room of good width, with beautifully designed mantel, appealing bay window and adjacent screened porch. Charming, bright dining room with bay window. Overlooking the garden, located to give seclusion or privacy, is a large room, 14x15, designed for use as FIRST FLOOR BEDROOM or library, with bath having tub and shower, and also adjacent to screened porch. The kitchen is one of those pictured by home magazines but seldom actually built into homes. There is an adjoining laundry or breakfast room.

The second floor is notable for an unusually large master's bedroom, 15x24½ with 2 huge walk-in closets and luxury bath with 2 wash basins, stall shower, tub, separate toilet room and towel closet. There are two additional fine bedrooms and bath. Stairway to excellent attic space available for additional rooms.

The soft tones of the painted walls create a restful atmosphere and together with the beautifully finished floors will enhance the charm of tastefully selected furnishings.

Texas Rancher Installs Two-Way Radio Net

Canadian, Tex. (U.P.).—One of the first radio communication systems ever to be used in ranch operations is being installed by E. S. Brainard.

The two-way radio network is being installed at both the Red Deer and John S. Creek ranches. Brainard also is licensed to operate a mobile transmitter of the walkie-talkie type.

The system, he says, will connect the far-flung ranch property, and ranchers of the Panhandle believe it will solve the locating and feeding of cattle during severe winter months.

GLASS blocks themselves aren't new, but we think this adaption rates applause. Five rows of glass block have been laid to form this outdoor living room. Bright, gay and unusual, it provides a feeling of privacy and is a practical windbreak. And its a wonderful way to cut off an unattractive view.

In case you hadn't noticed, your long distance calls are going through faster than at any time since before the war. The average is a few seconds over a minute and a half.

More of your calls are completed while you hold the 'phone—95 per cent—than at any time since Alexander Graham Bell invented the gadget. The goal of the telephone industry is one minute flat.

It's a far cry from the days when long distance operators connected you step by step, city by city, until you finally reached your party, and had to shout at the top of your voice to be heard. Now your call is flashed by push button dialing, electronic switching and countless other new scientific devices, and most of the time you can talk as easily and hear as well as on a local call.

Instead of traveling in solitude over a single pair of wires, your voice moves along with many others on complex circuits that may include network radio and television programs. Your call may go part way underground on coaxial cable and part way through the air on microwave radio beams. Yet it has complete privacy.

Tele-Tone Radio Corp. of New York has brought out a 10-inch table model television set for $149.95.

Company officials said the set, with about 61 square inches of picture, was the first of that size to be produced for less than $150.

Other sets in the company's 1950 line include a 10-inch set with built-in antenna for $169.95, a 12½-inch set at $199.95 and a 16-inch console with a glare reducing "black tube" for $299.95. The company's radio line included a three-way portable at $19.95.

There is a new kitchen clock and refrigerator defroster combination which will defrost the refrigerator.

A plastic encased clock with the switch controls inside, manufactured by Doray, Inc., 2601 North Broad St., Philadelphia, automatically turns the refrigerator off at 1 a. m. each night and after several hours, when the coils are free of ice, automatically switches the refrigerator on again.

During the shut-off periods, moisture created by the melting frost is circulated through the box and foods are thus kept fresher and longer. In addition, consumption of electric current and wear and tear on the refrigerator motor is said to be reduced.

Casement windows now can be given the protection of storm sash made especially for them. An easily-installed aluminum sash for this purpose has been put on the market by the Eagle-Picher Co. of Cincinnati.

The new product fastens permanently to the outside of the movable hinged casement. It moves with the window when the casement is opened for ventilation.

A new smaller Disposall designed especially for the elimination of food waste in homes where existing plumbing complicates installation of the standard Disposall is now in production by General Electric Co. at Bridgeport, Conn.

By employing a recently developed plumbing trap, the new Disposall can be quickly and conveniently installed in old or new sinks if the distance between the center line of the wall drain and the bottom of the sink is at least 7 inches.

The new Disposall is particularly adapted to small kitchens where storage space is severely limited. It is only 16 inches long. The under-the-sink area can be used to store wastebaskets, soaps and other supplies.

Floral Theme Still Tops in Home Fabrics

New York, N. Y.—American homemakers today prefer early colonial provincial designs in their choice of fabrics to decorate their homes.

Floral themes continue to be the top favorite, and medium-to-small patterns are the popular choice of the buying public. Hunter green, blue, lipstick red, white and deep brown are leading color selections.

These general facts, among others, were revealed in a national style census conducted on its extensive line of Glosheens by the Waverly Fabrics Division, F. Schumacher & Co., according to John Graham, sales manager.

The census was based on the total yardage sold of each of 65 different patterns from July, 1948, when they were first introduced, through July of this year. It constituted the first Nation-wide attempt to determine best sellers in fabric designs in a manner approximating the selection of popular tunes on the "Hit Parade" and best-selling books through the book stores.

Results, representing the people's verdict, were further confirmed by the critical judgment of 1243 retail store buyers and decorating department sales clerks located in all parts of the country, Graham said.

Too Many 'Weeks'

New York (U.P.). — Too many "weeks" are being held in the first week of May, the National Noise Abatement Council has decided. So next year it will observe its "week" from April 18-25 instead of in May, as previously.

Homes Offered for a Prayer

Richmond, England (AP).—There's room in an almshouse here, a notice says, provided applicants are:

"Poor women, spinsters or widows, at least 50 years of age, who can say the Lord's Prayer, Apostles' Creed and the 10 Commandments."

A clerk to the private charity institution explained the conditions were set down 200 years ago, but applicants no longer are made to recite the prayers.

Architect Tells Ways to Stretch Building Dollar

OF THE many dollar-stretchers available when building or remodeling, here are some often-overlooked ways to cut costs without cutting construction quality, according to Royal Barry Wills, noted architect.

A square house or room costs less than a rectangular one with the same amount of floor space.

A plain roof without dormers is least expensive. Carry the walls up 3 or 4 feet, give the roof less pitch, place short windows beneath the eaves for light and ventilation and eliminate the more expensive dormers.

Concrete or cinder blocks cost less than poured concrete for basement walls. If native stone is available near the building site this may cost even less.

Insulating the house with batts and blankets of mineral wool at time of construction costs less than applying this protection later. One great advantage of installing mineral wool during construction is that between 23 and 30 per cent can be saved on the heating plant installation. This is because a house insulated with full-thick mineral wool in exposed walls and attic requires a smaller heating plant.

Areaways around cellar windows may be made of bent iron or asbestos board, which is less expensive than ready-made devices.

Less Foundation Cost

LARGE sheets of plasterboard or similar dry-wall construction eliminate expensive lath and plaster.

Extending the second story out with a 2-foot overhang to provide shelter over entrances will eliminate porch roofs and give more second-floor area without foundation cost.

Use stock lumber and millwork without curliques. Eliminate all superfluous moldings and trim. The house looks better without these and savings are important.

Costs can be cut by omitting a porch if a terrace will serve as well. If a roof is desired in summer, use an awning over the terrace. A plain cement floor marked off in squares costs less than brick.

Bay windows cost money, but if a bay is wanted an oriel window is cheaper since it requires no foundation.

A large slab of stone or an old slab of concrete paving will make an inexpensive yet pleasing front entrance step for a ranch or country-style home. To further cut costs, one can do some of the work, such as laying a brick or flagstone walk.

Use a simple stock front door and make the entrance distinctive by flanking it with full-length shutters. This saves the cost of an elaborate entrance.

Use stock timbers for porch roof support instead of ornate columns.

More Dollar Savers

A SPACE-SAVER as well as a money-saver is a broad hinged shelf in the kitchen that drops down against the wall when not in use for eating or kitchen work. A variation of this is the shelf that folds up flat against the wall after use.

Save money and space with built-in kitchen cupboards and dish shelves; built-in drawers in clothes closets; built-in desks and bookshelves. Built-ins cut down the need for furniture, save floor space and give the home individuality.

Eliminate the fussy fireplace mantel; frame the opening with wide stock molding. This gives a pleasing design for either traditional and modern houses.

Let interior wood paneling retain its natural finish to avoid frequent painting. A light coat of wax will bring out the natural beauty of the wood.

Interior doors made of boards and battens and securely cross-braced on one side cost less than ready-made doors and add a picturesque touch to a ranch-type house.

Plumbing Economy

Keep the plumbing pipes as close together as possible, to save building and materials costs. Plan kitchen and bathroom back-to-back with the kitchen sink on the wall next to the bath; if a two-story house, place the bathroom directly above the kitchen.

Some of these suggestions will save a little; others save a lot, such as mineral wool insulation of the house at the time of construction to save heating plant costs. Utilize those which are appropriate to the style of the house and comply with local building codes.

How's That?

Winfred, S D. (U.P.). — Mrs. Nellie Barrett, 71, has been teaching school in this area for 45 years and says her job is getting easier all the time. "Kids aren't as hard to manage as they used to be," she observed.

Mother of 5 Not at All Sure Inherited Home Is Blessing

By Claire Cox

EAST ORANGE, N. J., Sept. 17 (U.P.).—Mrs. Mary Tranberg isn't sure whether it's a blessing or a bother to be given a home.

Mrs. Tranberg, 35-year-old mother of five children, and her upstairs neighbor, Mrs. Thomas Coulfield, have inherited the building they live in. Wilbur B. Driver, 75-year-old philanthropist industrialist who died last month, willed more than 23 East Orange houses to the women occupants.

Driver said he was doing it to help women become more independent. But as far as Mrs. Tranberg is concerned, owning her own home may mean less independence.

She and Mrs. Coulfield will be responsible for the property. They will have to pay the water bills, maintenance bills and taxes. They will have to buy oil for the furnace that heats the old three-story frame structure.

The widower who lives on the third floor will just continue to pay his $40-a-month rent, to the new owners, instead of Driver.

Mrs. Tranberg has been paying $35 a month for the five-room, first-floor apartment since 1947, when Driver bought the house for her and her children, Robert, 16; Rosalie, 15; Jimmy, 14; Janet, 12, and Donald, 8.

He also bought other houses, valued at $150,000 and spent another $100,000 to convert them for families hard-pressed by the housing shortage.

"Mr. Driver practically saved my life," Mrs. Tranberg said. "There I was alone with my five children and we had been given an eviction notice from our house because it had been sold. The judge told me to put the kids in a home. I had no place to go.

"Then I saw an ad in the paper. It said anyone without a home who had four kids or more should write in a letter why they needed a home. I wrote and Mr. Driver sent for me. He talked to me for a while and then he bought the house for me and rented it to me at a price I could afford on my $40-a-week income. He said he wanted my kids to have a nice home."

Mrs. Tranberg said Driver, founder of two New Jersey industrial firms, was a kind man throughout her dealings with him.

It seems that it's only after a person dies that people say nice things about them," she said. "He came to me when things were dark and I always liked him.

"Getting the house was a real surprise and I still don't know what to make of it. I guess it's kind of a mixed blessing, but nothing can be worse than what I went through before. It's hard to live by yourself, especially with a bunch of kids."

Hot and Cold Water From Nature

Sydney, Australia (AP).—Longreach, Queensland, Australia, has hot and cold water from nature. The cold water is pumped from the Thompson River, 3 miles away; the hot comes by deep bores from an underground artesian basin. It reaches the borehead practically at boiling point.

Try Money-Saving Gadgets

IF you're going to invest in gadgets for the house, start with something that saves you money, like a thermostat or roll-up screen.

As a guide to investments in gadgets, here's a suggested order of buying: First, those that help you save money; next, those that offer a safety or health improvement; third, gadgets that are a convenience and, last of all, the tricky ones that are of no great use, but somehow are irresistible to many because of their sheer "gadgetiness."

Thermostats are put at the top of the money-saving list because they help to save on fuel bills. Studies show that fuel costs increase 3.2 percent for each degree that house temperature rises, unregulated, above the comfort level.

Others in the money-saving category include: An incinerator to save on service charge, or a garbage-disposal unit; package receivers to prevent loss through theft; roll-up screens on all windows, to save paying a man to store them.

Some of the gadgets recommended for their safety features were a small hose and rack if your house is considerable distance from the fire department; three extinguishers—one each for garage, kitchen and the second floor.

Will Sacrifice NEW HOME . . .

For particular person desiring a custom-built residence in one of the finest N.W. neighborhoods, at a positive saving!

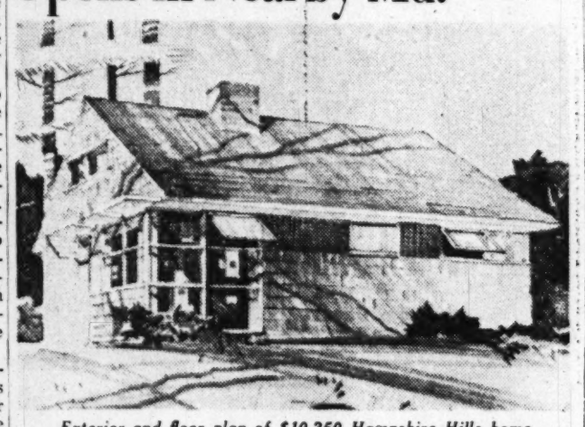
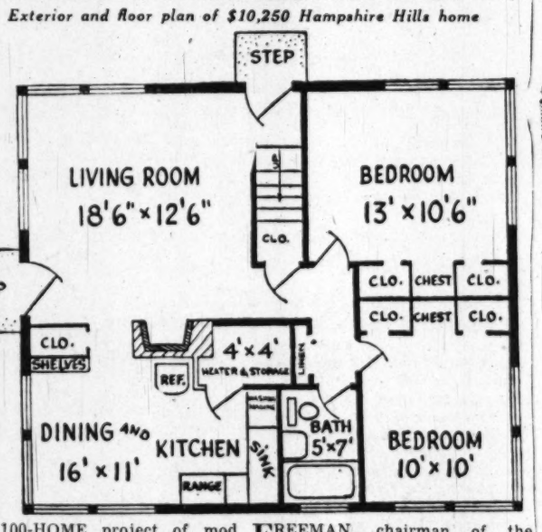
Project of 100 Modern Radiant Heated Houses Opens in Nearby Md.



Exterior and floor plan of $10,250 Hampshire Hills home



A 100-HOME project of modern, contemporary architecture, with a new type of radiant heating, has been started by Carl M. Freeman, Inc., off New Hampshire ave. extended, in nearby Maryland.

The homes are of California modern design, with great expanse of glass, expandable attic, wood-burning fireplace and other architectural features, with an equipped kitchen including Bendix washer, refrigerator, gas range and metal cabinets. The homes will sell for $10,250, Freeman said.

The new subdivision will be called Hampshire Hills, and is about one mile on the District side of the Naval Ordnance Laboratory at White Oaks, Md., off New Hampshire ave. extended.

No Experiment

THE custom-built type radiant heating system, although installed successfully in some Western States, is new to the Washington area as installed in large subdivisions, the builder said. Several architects have used the system very successfully in private homes, however.

Hollow tile blocks are laid end-to-end to allow a continuous passage for warm air. When the floor is completely filled with these blocks, concrete is poured over the entire level floor, producing a smooth, concrete slab foundation.

A conventional furnace blows hot air through the hollow tile ducts, thereby warming the entire concrete slab, which radiates heat upward and warms the home. Asphalt tile flooring is laid over the concrete to provide the finished flooring. The completed floor, with the radiant heating system turned on, is so pleasant that babies can crawl over the floor with no danger of catching cold, Freeman claimed.

Conventional radiant heating systems use iron or copper piping laid on a prepared gravel bed, over which concrete is poured. Hot water flowing through the pipes heats the floor. With the Freeman system, however, warm air and hollow tile ducts replace the hot water and pipes.

Boast Hot Air, Too

THE FREEMAN system, he said, is also very flexible. Two warm-air registers open directly from the hollow tile air passages into the rooms, giving instant hot air while the concrete floor is warming up. The hot-air passage (metal duct form) is extended to the second floor expansible attic for heating purposes if the owner wishes to complete the upstairs into two more bedrooms.

The exterior construction of homes at Hampshire Hills is of California shingles in bright colors, which brightens up the quaint subdivision. Both side walls and ceilings are insulated.

Another architectural trick is the provision of two sliding door, floor-to-ceiling closets in each bedroom, plus a built-in chest and mirror between them. Thus, a family needs only a bed to complete a minimum furniture bedroom.

Builder Freeman has won national acclaim with his home of "California modern design." Such publications as Architectural Forum, Practical Builder, American Home, etc., have written up his project of "California Cottages" in Carol Highlands, also off New Hampshire ave.

FREEMAN, chairman of the Home Builder's Association's committee, which sponsored National Home Week, just ended, said the home-buying public is looking for new advances in home planning, because newspapers and magazines have given so much space to twentieth century designed homes. The Hampshire Hills subdivision was said to incorporate all the new advances in home planning and, is to Freeman's knowledge, the only low-priced radiant heated home subdivision in the entire Washington area.

The California modern homes will be built in groups of 10, with construction planned all through the winter. A model home is open. Lots are approximately 60 by 120 feet and will be sodded and shrubbed.

Well-Lit Rooms Need Adequate Colors

By Lynn Hardesty

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Interior decorators are talking a lot these days about the proper lighting of rooms at night. People are enjoying their homes more under lamp light than in the past because of the greater efficiency of modern illumination. They are also trying to bring out the greatest beauty of the colors in their curtains, upholstery, carpets and wall hues with various types of lighting.

In the past, the smart thing was to create a romantic glow with a lamp and leave the rest of the room in shadow. Today, this lighting technique has been replaced. We know that soft lighting throughout the interior makes a room more livable at night and brings out all the colors in its decoration. Many lamps may be used. (Decorators recommend two to six in an average-size interior.) Frequently recessed ceiling lights or cove lighting (indirect illumination along the top of the walls) is installed—with table lamps for reading or for dark corners.

FABER BIRREN, noted color authority, advocates that homemakers decide whether a room will be used mostly in the daytime or at night before choosing colors for room furnishings. Many living rooms and dining rooms may be treated as evening rooms, he feels. A bedroom—especially if it is used as a sitting room or a study—can often be thought of as a daytime room.

With plenty of natural light any color will appear at its best. Consequently "daytime rooms" do not have to be given as much consideration with relation to color and illumination. For "evening rooms," Mr. Birren recommends rose, peach, mauve, apricot or pale green as wall colors. Blue, it must be remembered, is recessive and will appear darker by artificial illumination than by daylight.

The type of lighting used also has its effect on room colors, Mr. Birren points out. Incandescent lamps, with their warm yellowish light, approach the old-time candle glow and tend to cause changes in colors. Unless this is taken into consideration, some yellows used on wall surfaces may appear paler or weaker.

With paint, this situation may be easily handled. Decorators frequently give yellow a tinge of green so it will appear a clear yellow at night. Strong reds, oranges and browns retain most of their daylight appearance under incandescent lighting. Dark hues may appear warmer and even richer toned. As is to be expected, additional illumination is often needed in a room with dark wall colors.

MOST adaptable to modern schemes of room lighting are the various types of fluorescent lamps which are used in cove lighting as well as in other fixtures. They are often combined with incandescent lights which, with their warm yellowish tint, offset the bluish daylight color of fluorescent light.

Recently a test of fluorescent lamps was conducted by Winonah Murphy, color analyst for a large electric product company. Her findings revealed that a new type which has a warm tone is best to use with room colors in the yellow range. Such hues include pale yellow, chartreuse, buff and cream.

Also effective under this lamp are reds which include Swedish red, a soft purplish red or Dubonnet, and a reddish off-white. With the regular daylight fluorescent lamp, greens and blues—including olive green, grayed green, Wedgwood, royal and medium blue—show up effectively. Pinks and tans retain their hues best under a soft white lamp.

Recessed lights in the ceiling provide good general illumination throughout this attractive playroom in the basement of the "Home of '49" in American University Park. Built by Karl W. Corby Construction Co. the house was decorated by William E. Miller Furniture Co. The paneled playroom has walnut furniture, a television set, and built-in bar

Teen-Age Girl's Room Calls for Planning

New York, Sept. 17.—It's no secret to mothers that teen-age girls usually live in a world of their own. Smart mothers soon discover that the teen-ager's world of her own is happier and more productive when the room of her own is furnished with foresight and imagination.

An intelligently designed and decorated bedroom, in addition to making the teen-ager's life more pleasant and complete, can also help prepare her for the time when she'll have teen-agers of her own. A room that reflects her personality and is her own responsibility will help her feel that she contributes to the management and atmosphere of the home.

Here are some suggestions for achieving that end:

1. Let Miss Teen-ager have a part in decorating it. Consult her when selecting paint or wallpaper. Chests, tables, tables or chairs can be decorated with designs of her choosing, painted by her or with paper decorations pasted on and lacquered over. 2. The room should be easy to manage, especially if the teenager is responsible for its maintenance. Easy to clean floor and wall materials, such as clay tile, will cut cleaning chores and add brightness.

3. There should be plenty of closet and cupboard space for orderly storage of clothing, playthings and sports equipment. 4. Built-in seats and cabinets will allow more center space and make the room seem larger. 5. Every teen-ager reaching primping age wants a dressing table. Give yours one topped with easily cleaned tiles she can decorate herself. 6. Let Miss Teen-ager convert the unused radio cabinet into a storage cabinet, bookcase or record holder reflecting her own hobbies or decorating tastes. 7. A bedroom lavatory, although not practical in every home, enables Miss Teen-Ager to do all her beautifying in one spot and prevents a trail of powder and hairpins between bedroom and bath.

A Rambler of Quality

Maximum livability and convenience combined with solid quality. Immovable, fireproof precast concrete floor construction. Many other features. With convenient North Arlington location. 3-bedroom model above for $16,750. Others from $15,250 to $18,800.

Renters Pay More

Income Tax Savings By Home Owners Noted By Builders

AN EDUCATIONAL campaign to prove that home owners pay less income tax than renters is under way here by several building firms, sparked by the Home Builders Association.

An editorial in the association's monthly bulletin, written by association official James W. Pearson, points out that home owners are entitled to deduct mortgage interest and taxes from income tax returns.

Taking a hypothetical case whereby a veteran purchased a $12,000 home with no down payment and $84 monthly carrying charges, Pearson said the buyer could save about $12 a month in income taxes.

He explained it this way: The estimated income tax saving in minimum income tax bracket, if the buyer purchased the $12,000 house, would amount to about $12, which means that the $84 a month carrying charges would actually be reduced to $72.

Two of the builders in The Washington Post sponsored "Homes of '49" housing exhibit have mimeographed their analysis of tax savings and passed them out to the thousands of persons inspecting their homes.

Glassman Brothers brochure carries this message:

"A man making $5000 per year with a wife and 2 children purchases a $12,500 home, for example. The first year's carrying charges would be $562.50 at 4½ percent interest. The general property tax would be about $175. Assuming the family had a normal amount of deductions, other taxes, losses, medical and dental expenses, and miscellaneous business expenses amounting to $500, the total deduction would be $1237.50.

"This man's income tax on a joint return would be $226.18. If the same family rented, their total deductions would be $500 and their income tax would come to $348.60. This is a saving of $122.43 every year for the home owned."

A brochure distributed by James E. Schwab at his model home at 3617 Appleton st. nw., analyzes the cost of a large sum of money invested at 5 percent interest and the same money invested in a luxury home. He estimates the actual yearly cost to a purchaser of a $52,500 house would be $1538.62, if $52,500 in investments were cashed and the home purchased outright.

Wood Siding Simulated By Builder

A Tulsa (Okla.) builder has developed a new method of laying concrete blocks to secure an insulated wall, plus an exterior appearance that simulates wood siding, Practical Builder magazine reports.

Regular 8x8x16-inch block units are split in half vertically. The exterior half is laid with a tilt-in at the top of each course and overlap at bottom. The inside half block is laid flush in the usual manner and a layer of insulation board is placed between the two wyes, which are bonded to gether with galvanized wall ties between insulation board joints.

Lintels over openings are reinforced, cast-in-place concrete beams. Agatite plaster is applied direct to interior side of wall without furring strips or plaster base. Exterior walls are painted with two coats of colored masonry sealer.

According to the builder, the construction cost compares favorably with a conventional furred block wall. The cost of insulation board about balances the eliminated furring and plaster base. Labor cost in laying the blocks is somewhat higher than a conventional wall but is offset by the better quality wall obtained. The insulated, split-block wall has an over-all heat transmission coefficient less than that of conventional wood frame. The wall does not sweat and cracks do not occur.

Winterproofing of Homes Will Save Heat

IF YOU are looking for ways to save "house" money this winter, take the advice of heating engineers who say that a thorough winter-proofing treatment now will save you heating money and add to the comfort of your winter living.

Here are the things they say you should do to winterproof your home:

1. Inspect and clean heating plant.
2. Repair or replace storm sash and doors.
3. Weatherstrip doors and windows.
4. Insulate walls and ceilings.

Don't jump to the conclusion, the engineers warn, that the heating system or the fuel used is the cause of poorly heated rooms. All too often they are the result of lack of skill in using the fuel, in regulating the heating system, or in neglecting to weatherproof your house.

Stop Heat Waste

THE biggest cause of heat waste is failure to keep the heat inside where it belongs. To prevent this loss, experts recommend insulation around all heated areas and weatherstripping around windows and doors. Storm windows and doors are also recommended in cold climates.

How winterproofing a home saves money was demonstrated recently by a university study. It was found that more than half of the fuel bill could be saved in a two-story house built of 8-inch exterior stone walls by weatherstripping and adding storm sash and doors on all openings and by insulating walls and ceilings. Weather strips and storm sash accounted for 13 per cent of the saving, while insulated walls and ceilings took another 42 per cent off the fuel bill.

Builders Continue Hot Pace With 98,000 Units In August

Building operations in the District during August increased nearly five million dollars over the same month of 1948, and about 1½ million over July, 1949. Total August volume was $8,855,335.

Included in the report of building permits issued were permits for 168 brick residences estimated to cost $1,574,700 to build; 21 apartment buildings worth $3,389,000, 2 offices at $1,060,000 and 3 churches at $1,040,000.

Distribution of new construction per District area was as follows: Northwest, $6,026,700; Southeast, $729,000 and Northeast, $569,000. Permits for repairs totaled $1,530,000.

Architecturally, the new buildings will be 51 detached homes, 86 semidetached, 12 community, 19 row and 566 apartment units. The Northeast will have 77, Southeast 116 and Northwest 541.

The new construction is expected to house 734 families.

Right Color Scheme Eases Eyestrain

The selection of paint color for offices is just as important as it is for homes, stores, plants and factories. The tints and tones chosen must work in harmony with natural and artificial lighting. The eyes of the desk workers—from clerk to president—need thoughtful care if employes are to do their best work and remain in the best physical condition.

Building Operations in District Up $5 Million Over August '48

Homebuilders continued their brisk pace in August, starting 98,000 new permanent nonfarm dwelling units, an increase of 2000 units over July and 11,400 over August 1948, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has announced.

August marked the fourth successive month in which new homes were started at about the rate of 100,000 a month. Moreover, homebuilding activity this past summer, as measured by new units put under construction, was at the highest monthly level on record for June, July, and August.

Preliminary Bureau estimates show a Nation-wide total of 647,500 new dwelling units started during the first 8 months of 1949, only 2 percent, or 11,700 units, under last year's total for the same months.

The gains this year result from continued increases in rental accommodations (units in two-or-more family structures) and publicly financed housing begun by State and local housing authorities. Almost 28,000 new publicly financed dwellings have been ut under construction thus far in 1949, compared with 8800 units started during the 1948 January-August period.

Telegraphic reports of local building permits issued in principal cities of the country show that all regions maintained or exceeded July's activity except the West North Central and South Atlantic States. Most of the August rise occurred in cities in the Middle Atlantic and East North Central regions. During June, July, and August, the East North Central region surpassed all others in number of new homes authorized for construction.

Increases were shown during August for a majority of the cities reporting permits issued for homebuilding, with the most notable gains in Atlanta, Ga.; Cleveland, Ohio; Corpus Christi, Tex.; and New York City and Syracuse, N. Y.

Sees World's Grassland in Bad Shape

Berkeley, Calif (AP).—The earth's land area is 30 per cent grassland, says Dr. Arthur W. Sampson, University of California professor of forestry. And much of this area has been devasted by poor grazing practices, he says.

He pictures large parts of Africa, Spain, Greece, India and Palestine as wrecked by such practices. In the United States he estimates that existing range is producing at only 52 per cent of its original capacity and that 55 per cent of the range has less than half of its former capacity.

Good range should have a dense stand of perennial grass, he says.

Hollin Hills Poses Sales Problem

Homes Sold Out, Visitors Ask for More

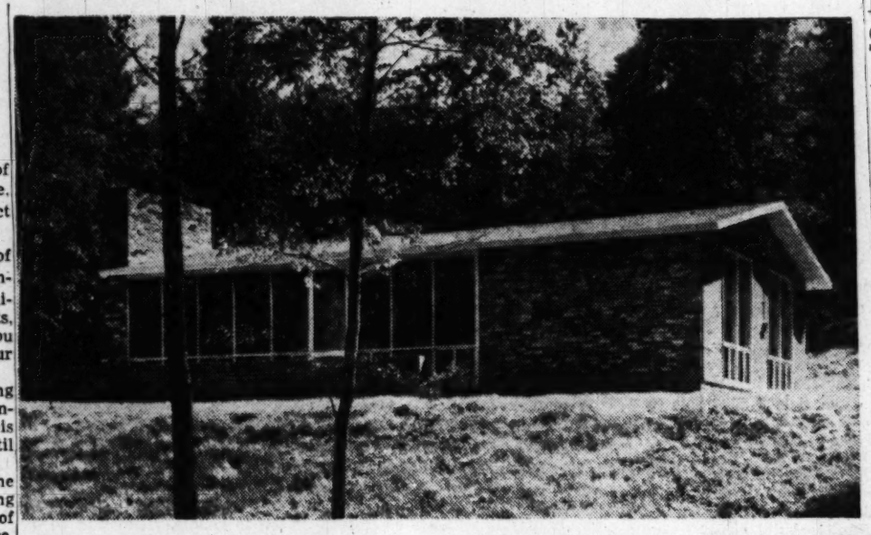
BUILD an eye-catching home of modern design, at a low price, in a good location, and you attract nice comments from neighbors.

Build an entire community of the same — three-bedroom ramblers, with lots of glass and architectural tricks, on half-acre lots, selling for around $12,000 and you have a sales problem on your hands.

The problem isn't in getting people to buy, it's in how to convince people you've sold out this year and how about waiting until next?

That problem now faces the builder-architect team developing Hollin Hills, 3½ miles south of Alexandria on Fort Hunt rd. There, Robert Davenport, builder, and Charles Goodman, architect, are building the first community in the Greater Washington area to be devoted entirely to moderately priced homes of modern, contemporary design.

Although all homes in the 1949 building program have been sold, so much interest has been stirred up by the housing achievement that visitors have been slowing building operations with requests to be shown through a completed home.



Model home at Hollin Hills has low, clean lines, with wide expanse of glass

A model home has been opened for public inspection, at 25c per person admission fee, with proceeds going to the Hollin Hall School Playground Equipment Fund. Approximately 75 homes will be erected next year, according to the developers.

The model home, shown above, contains three bedrooms, a living room, 19 by 12½ feet, with a brick wall-fireplace at one end and another wall entirely of glass, a dining room with a window wall, a modern kitchen and bath, and eight closets.

Each house is placed on a half acre lot, and the whole wooded tract is interspersed with park areas. The model home's interior was also planned by Architect Goodman. The modern living and dining room furniture is from Knoll Associates of New York.

Bedroom furniture, lamps, glassware, paintings and accessories have been furnished by the Glass House, on Connecticut ave. Fabrics and bamboo blinds are from Top Recker of Alexandria, and antique pine pieces in the living room are from the Antique Shop, Alexandria.

A larger three-level home with seven rooms, also designed by Goodman, is nearing completion across the road from the model house. It will sell for $16,900.

A press preview of the model home last Thursday attracted leaders in the fields of finance, housing, furnishings, press and radio.

483 Homes Go on Sale at Indian Head

Public sale of 483 homes at Potomac Heights, Indian Head, Md., has begun, according to the Potomac Heights Mutual Owners Association, Inc., a cooperative group which has an option to purchase the project from the Government. Homes will sell to veterans for $1200 to $1300, according to Allen & Rocks, Inc., of Washington, agents.

The project is a public housing development built in 1942 under the Lanham Act to provide housing for war workers. It is located about 20 miles from the District Line, off Indian Head hgwy., which is a continuation of South Capitol st.

The Association will pay the Public Housing Administration $600,000 for the community, including a shopping center, vacant land for future development, community center, etc. There are 18 one-bedroom homes, 18 three-bedroom homes and 447 with two bedrooms.

The community owns its own electrical, water and sewer system. Down payments on the houses will be around $300, with monthly payments of around $30, according to the agents. The homes are frame, with bath, dinette, living room, equipped kitchen and bedrooms.

Advice Offered

Check List For Buying Furniture

WILL our furniture last as long as the installment payments?

To help you make sure it does, the October issue of Liberty magazine offers sage and shopping-wise advice to the housewife who is furniture-shopping this fall.

Liberty says the best way to protect yourself from buying foolishly is by knowing the right questions and the right answers.

Two of the most important "do's" in the furniture-buying check list are:

"DO scout the store. If you have not done business with it before; if none of your friends have, check with the local Better Business Bureau or Chamber of Commerce before making a sizable purchase at any store. Inquire about credit policies, return and exchange privileges, handling of complaints.

"DO shop wisely, and compare. There's little fair-trading in furniture prices, so you might do better down the street."

As a shopping gauge, the article helps you to buy a chair. The article points out the differences in upholstery, construction, basic materials and serviceability. It gives you a good idea of what you can expect to pay, and warns you can't expect the same features in budget-and-medium-priced furniture as in expensive pieces.

It's Time to Build Outdoor Fireplace

IF YOU crave the joy of an outdoor fireplace—and millions do—there are some preliminary questions to be settled before construction starts.

Are you primarily interested in the ornamental advantage of evening fires, or in outdoor cookery, or both?

How many people should you provide for, including household and probable guests?

What material do you favor?—brick, stone, concrete?

Can your outdoor fireplace be built against your home or garage, combining its flue with a stack containing other flues; is this desirable?

Would it be a good idea to combine it with an incinerator for disposal of household wastes?

Is it feasible or desirable to combine the fireplace with a garden wall?

Do you plan, now or in the future, to build a shelter over it, so that it can be enjoyed when rain falls—or be completely enclosed for continuation of barbecue fun in cold weather?

This outdoor fireplace boasts a built-in range and oven unit available at local stores

Question of Cost

HOW much do you propose to spend? The range is wide. A simple, masonry barbecue may cost no more than $7.00 for mason materials. The iron grids will be about $5.00 and the masonry job is not beyond the capacity of a handy owner. This represents the minimum expense. With more liberal allowance and ambitious desires costs may advance, step by step, to the elaborate structures that landscape architects plan as part of an artistic garden.

In a great majority of cases, fireplaces are planned with the thought of outdoor cookery, although many owners will wish to combine the opportunity for an attractive blaze to brighten the shadows of summer evenings. In a small proportion of cases, a pleasant fire is the sole object and some lovely fireplaces have been built with this in view.

The location is worth careful study. Your outdoor fireplace should be a part of a pleasant garden setting, with plantings to give it a sense of enclosure and with tables and benches conveniently arranged. Too many enthusiastic beginners think only of the barbecue and its food output, forgetting until later the factors of attractiveness and convenience.

Do not build too far from your kitchen door. This warning comes from suburban owners who have erected their fireplaces at the foot of wooded hillsides. The carrying problem spoiled much of the barbecue enjoyment.

Fireplace Materials

ALL fireplaces represent combinations of masonry with metal grids, doors, covers, reinforcing angles, etc. Common brick is generally the most accessible, low cost masonry material and the easiest to handle. It may be used with its native surface exposed, or it can be painted with specially adapted masonry paints to harmonize with surrounding structures.

Firebrick is a good material with higher resistance to heat than other bricks. However, the ordinary common or shale brick stands the moderate heat of an outdoor fireplace very well. Face bricks may be purchased in a variety of tones and textures.

Considerable freedom is practiced in fireplace masonry and one should not overlook local or salvaged materials. Discarded paving brick or cobblestones make attractive fireplaces. Perhaps there is a wealth of field stones in the nearby neighborhood. If quarry stone is available, roughly broken fragments can be laid up into a charming rubble. If you prefer cut stone carefully shaped, better see a stone mason.

Electricity Helps

CONVENIENCES around a barbecue include a place to store firewood and cooking utensils, disposer to place waste garbage and a water tap nearby. Electricity permits lighting the scene and can be used to turn a spit. Suitable tables and benches are a must. Plantings lend a final touch of charm and seclusion.

Whatever type or size of fireplace is built, it must not sag or heave as the result of water or frost action. A foundation carried below the frost line eliminates such action. A well compacted sub bed is most important. Filled-in earth should have a chance to settle, or be thoroughly tamped.

Choice of fuel will be influenced by local conditions. In woodland sites, forest faggots will be used. Driftwood is a resource at the waterside. In the case of a garden fireplace, where a bright flame is sought, wood must usually be purchased from commercial sources, coal being a rare alternative.

For a cooking fire, charcoal is preferred, and even where campers are blessed with an abundance of faggots or driftwood, nothing else is so adapted to keeping alive a hot, smokeless bed of coals. Most stores handling camping supplies sell charcoal in convenient packages—also hardware stores, grocery stores, etc.

Moisture Difficulties

CARE must be taken to see that the fireplace does not suffer from the elements during the winter season, when it is out of use. This means tightly joined masonry in which frost action can find no crevice to operate. Ground water, too, may be a menace at certain seasons of the year, and low spots, toward which water might drain, are not to be preferred as fireplace locations.

It is a practice quite frequently followed to elevate the hearth a few inches above ground level in case of a garden fireplace; and to use care in the case of a cooking fireplace to avoid having the ash chamber invaded by ground drainage.

Smoke Control

THE smoke problem in the case of an outdoor fireplace is different, and, on the whole, more perplexing than in an indoor fireplace. Constant air currents tend to blow the smoke into the most inconvenient quarters. Chimney heights are generally less, and draft correspondingly diminished.

In the case of a garden fireplace, relief from smoke nuisance is promoted by facing the fireplace in the direction of prevailing winds and by shielding it as much as possible from counter currents. The flue should be ample—the throat relatively open. A damper is of no avail and is, therefore, omitted. Depth of the hearth is usually greater than for indoor fireplaces.

In the case of the cooking fireplace with a chimney, the prime consideration is to have a fire chamber that can be closed tightly when smoke-producing fuel is being burned. If the top is opened during the use of charcoal fuel, it should be arranged to protect the face of the chimney from discoloration.

Soy Bean Rise in U. S. Spectacular

In 40 years, soy beans have risen from almost nothing to one of the major United States crops, says W. J. Morse of the Department of Agriculture. The department first became interested in the crop in 1908.

The beans were imported from China. At first there was little use made of them in this country. Mostly they were planted when some other crop failed. Then they were used for many years mainly as a forage crop.

After 1930, however, soy beans began to have a place in many crop rotations. Now they are widely used as a cash crop. The beans are sold for food and industrial uses.

Prefabricated Homes Bought For Air Force

Prefabricated homes have been selected by the Army Corps of Engineers for a 80-unit project at the Kessler Air Force Base, Biloxi, Miss., to provide quarters for noncommissioned officers and their families.

The houses, to be manufactured by the Green Lumber Co., Laurel, Miss., will be single-family detached dwellings with three bedrooms. The Mississippi company will fabricate the houses in its Laurel factory and transport the panels to the air base. The project will be started this week, with occupancy expected shortly after January 1, 1950.

The housing contract was awarded on August 24, after bids were submitted by six producers of wood prefabricated homes and one manufacturer of a porcelain-enamel steel house. The houses are of frame construction, with approximately 1,100 square feet of floor area. The Green Lumber Co. has produced many dwellings for both private builders and Government agencies.

Industrial City Rises in Sands of Northeast Egypt

Cairo, Sept. 18 (AP).—A new industrial city is rising from the desert sands of Northeast Egypt.

By February one of the largest chemical fertilizer plants in the world will be operating there. It is expected to provide more than 60 per cent of the fertilizer requirements of the Nile kingdom.

It will be Egypt's biggest single step toward the industralization of this traditionally agricultural nation, a slow process which began after World War I.

The new industrial city will be spread over 123 acres in the heart of the desert not far from Suez. As the nearest city, Suez is expected to develop into one of the Middle East's most important industrial centers.

A railway line linking Suez, the factory and Sadat has been built at a cost of $480,000.

A complete city is being built for the 2200 workers and their families. It includes a mosque, restaurants, cooperative societies, a school, a hospital, a sports club and a theater.

State Names Celebrate Roman-Grecian Times

Albany, N. Y. (U.P.).—A map of up-State New York reads like a classicist's who's who.

A tract of land bordered on the west by a lake bearing the name of the Roman philosopher Seneca and on the east by the city of Troy is dotted with the towns of Cato, Lysander, Hannibal, Cicero, Manlius, Scipio and many others.

The Roman-Grecian name-taking started when the little village of Vanderheydens Ferry adopted the name of Troy in 1789.

Even the Roman emperors have received honorary mention—Aurelius and Marcellus. The conglomeration on ancient greats also includes Virgil, Ulysses, Solon, Hector and Brutus.

Notice Slightly Late

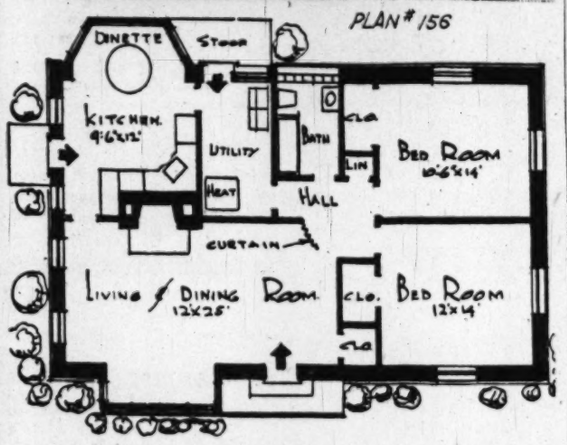
Kitchens Getting Real Dressing-Up In Modern Homes

TOLEDO, Sept. 17.—Kitchens, in former years just drab and cheerless chore rooms for busy housewives, are getting a real dressing-up today. Modern appliances, picture windows, and walls and table tops of structural glass are transforming the old kitchen into another bright room for the family and guests alike.

A special favorite with those who have just built new homes or remodeled interiors is structural glass. Recently, a new mastic was developed which makes the installation of Vitrolite wainscots a simple matter, and many home owners are having their plastered kitchen walls faced with the colorful structural glass.

It is particularly useful when installed behind or alongside the stove. For not only is this glass fireproof but spattering greases can be easily removed with a damp cloth. The glass is impervious to moisture and does not absorb unpleasant cooking odors.

Like Bay Windows?



(P) Newsfeatures

A DISTINCTIVE appearance for the small four-room house is achieved in this design by the use of two bay windows—one opposite the fireplace in the large living room and one for the dinette in the kitchen. Aside from these two details, the plan conforms to the economical simplicity of a rectangle. This is plan 156 by Paul T. Haagen, architect, 59 East Van Buren st., Chicago 5, Ill. The house covers an area of approximately 1050 square feet

Diggers Find Relics Of Long-Ago Disaster

Cranbrook, B. C. (U.P.).—A carton containing dozens of men's canvas shoes was dug up at the site of the Frank Slide near here by a power shovel.

The shoes, many of which were in good condition, were a memento of the disastrous slide which took the lives of 66 people when Turtle Mountain collapsed on the village of Frank, Alberta.

Almost 70 million tons of rock fell on the sleeping village on April 29, 1903.

'Kentucky on the March' Tells Story of State's Reawakening

By Horace B. Ward

LOUISVILLE, KY., Sept. 17 (AP).—Early in 1944, a group of citizens here adopted a slogan, "Wake Up, Kentucky." Today it is "Kentucky on the March," as the group which sparked the change prepares to go out of existence.

Many Kentuckians, like most Americans anywhere, refused to admit anything about Kentucky could be less than perfect. The committee for Kentucky began by announcing boldly such unpalatable facts as:

Kentucky stands forty-first among the 48 States in per capita expenditures for education.

Only two States have a higher death rate from tuberculosis.

Only one State has a shorter average school term.

There is no inside toilet on 97 per cent of Kentucky's farms and on 42,000 farms in the State there isn't even an outside privy.

There were many other shockers—fewer city water systems and less electricity than most States, forty-eighth in the average salary for health officials.

A Reawakening

MUCH of that is changed. The story of this achievement and the way it came about are told in a new book, "Kentucky on the March," by the founder and head of the committee, Harry W. Schacter, a Louisville department store executive.

Kentuckians, used to bragging about their lush blue grass, beautiful women, fast horses and fine whisky, were startled by the committee's revelations. The worst of it was, the blunt facts were trumpeted loudly for all—even "furriners"—to see and hear.

The dearth of teachers, doctors, roads and privies was advertised in newspapers, over the radio, in pamphlets. Essay contests were sponsored in Kentucky schools and colleges on all the things wrong with the Commonwealth. Exhibits at State and county fairs drove home the lesson.

Schacter and his associates were kept busy speaking to men's luncheon clubs, women's clubs, parent-teacher associations and conventions.

The opposition, though loud, proved to be relatively minor. From the beginning, the committee reminded Kentuckians their State once had been a leader in education, industry and many other realms and it could be again.

Improvements Noted

THE committee began by amassing facts to prove the uncomplimentary things it had said about Kentucky. A series of 14 reports was prepared by experts in agriculture, education, health, housing, taxation and others.

The reports were colorful pamphlets with pictures, charts and graphs. The print was big and there was lots of white space to catch the eye. They went to public officials, schools, colleges, libraries and clubs, unions and farm bureaus and Kentucky began to wake up.

"Kentucky On The March" lists 27 improvements in conditions over the State which have taken place between the fall of 1943 and the early part of 1949. Without mentioning all, here are a few:

Kentucky school enrollment has increased seven percent from 1943 to 1949. School attendance is up five percent.

The average length of public school terms has increased by 13 days. The percentage of Kentuckians having public library service has risen nine percent.

The average salary for teachers has been raised $311 a year.

The committee reports more farmers owning their farms, more farms on hard-surface roads, more farms with telephones, electric power and tractors.

Medical Aid Up

"MOST heartening," says Schacter, "agricultural production increased approximately 25 percent, and the average income from farm production increased from $640 in 1940 to $1860 per farm family in 1946."

State aid to each aged person, dependent child and needly blind person has been boosted from 40 to 70 per cent. At the same time, the State reports a drop in the percentage of its aged population requiring public aid.

The State is building five sanatoriums for treatment of the tubercular. Plans are under way to build greatly needed general hospitals in strategic centers. The Kentucky Medical Association sponsored a scholarship fund to encourage young physicians to settle in rural areas. Clinics on wheels diagnose cancer, tuberculosis and dental ills.

The committee's board of directors has voted to wind up its affairs March 1, 1950. During the remaining months, it plans a final phase of its activities, the formation of "committees for-" this or that city, town or county which it hopes will carry on the work it has started.

Upturn in Furniture Sales Forecast

A "HIGHLY SATISFACTORY" fall business in furniture and other branches of home furnishings was forecast by Gen. Lawrence H. Whiting, president of the American Furniture Mart, in Chicago, after a survey of the home goods industry in several sections of the country. Interviews with manufacturers, merchants and wholesalers conducted by Mart executives revealed the following, General Whiting said:

"Many merchants have discovered that they didn't buy enough of the smartest designs at the summer market, held in July. On seeking refills, they are finding the factories which made the goods booked up through October and November. The retailers had sold through the first of the year from their inventory, and were unprepared for the deluge of demand for the smart new patterns. Factories which had beseeched their salesmen for orders in the spring months have now ordered some of their men to come off the road and take a vacation.

Chicago buying offices report that there is an adequate supply of goods to fill fall needs, but that there is a definite shortage of the "hot" values, designed and priced for prewar levels, present at the Mart in July.

One factory announced a price increase amounting to 8 per cent during the past week; another plant, which had worked three or four days a week in the early part of the year, has stopped taking orders on the bulk of its line; another has said it is "sold up" until the Winter Market in January. Territories in which this has occurred have included New England, North Carolina and Virginia and Arkansas, all leading producers of bedroom and dining room furniture, General Whiting said.

While dollar volume on home furnishings will not equal the record year of 1948, the total of units sold in 1949 may approximate the all-time high. Prices, now 12 to 15 per cent lower, will account for the differential.

Holes in Flat Earth Worry Ethiopians

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (AP).—Since the world is flat, the Sinclair Petroleum Co. had better take care that its drills don't burst through the other side and let all the oil leak out. And anyway, how can oil have been formed millions of years ago when the present year is only 1949?

Those are typical remarks of back-country Ethiopians to Rene J. Bender, who has the unique job of explaining to a backward people why the world needs oil—and why it is to the advantage of Ethiopia and Ethiopians that oil reserves here be exploited. Bender, Sinclair Petroleum Co. representative in Ethiopia, recently finished an extensive tour of the remote provinces. He lectured, showed a film on the evolution of the oil industry and conducted round table conferences.

New Use Found For Weed Killer

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP).—A clew to making plant food more nutritious has been found in research work at Michigan State College. It came in studies with the weed killer, 2, 4-D, by H. M. Sell, C. L. Hammer and R. W. Luecke. Used on red kidney bean plants, it doubled their protein content, and also changed the vitamin content, they said. The amount of three B vitamins decreased in the leaves, but increased in the stems. Carotene decreased in both stems and leaves, but pantothenic acid increased in both stems and leaves. The work suggests the possibility of substantially increasing or changing the food value of plants through use of these growth regulators, they said.

Employment by Construction Firms Up 54,000 in August

Employment by construction contractors rose by 54,000 workers between mid-July and mid-August to a total of 2,333,000, as a result of more construction jobs in almost every section of the country, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday.

The August employment level was the highest reached thus far in 1949, but it fell about 50,000 short of the postwar peak set in August, 1948. Most of the rise from July to August occurred in the east north central and west south central regions, where substantial employment gains took place.

Expenditures for new construction put in place reached 1,902 million dollars in August—a moderate gain of about 50 million dollars over the revised estimate for July. This level of expenditures was the highest yet reached this year and closely approached the postwar peak of 1,934 million established in August, 1948. The 50 million dollar rise was about evenly distributed between privately and publicly financed work. All major types of construction shared in the increase except industrial and commercial building, which dipped slightly.

The seasonal upswing in expenditures for private homebuilding lost momentum in August, rising by 10 million dollars or only 2 percent from the revised July estimate to a total of 660 million dollars. Outlays for construction of privately financed public utilities continued the monthly climb begun in March, reflecting expansion of facilities for electric light and power to meet still heavy industrial and commercial demands and to service new residential areas.

Hard Way to Burglarize Not Good Enough

Beloit, Wis. (U.P.).—A burglar ignored doors and windows in his unsuccessful try at breaking into a local tavern.

First he built himself a shed next to one of the tavern walls. Then he went to work with a saw and drill. But his work was cut short by sunrise.

Police found his tools in the shed next to the unburglarized tavern the next day.

Arab Refugees Unhappy in Changed Land

Amman, Jordan (U.P.).—"Unbelievable though it may seem in the twentieth century," a refugee relief worker in Jerusalem said, "I have seen with my own eyes refugees feeding on wild grass like animals."

It was said to have happened in a village near Ramallah, 10 miles north of Jerusalem.

A group of United Nations relief workers were on an inspection tour when they saw a refugee family cutting wild grass and eating it on the spot. Among the family were two children who kept crying while gnawing at the grass.

The relief workers hardly believed their eyes but on questioning the family, they were told its members had not eaten for days.

The situation of the Palestine Arab refugees has become so appalling that the strangest stories are being reported about the unhappy people every day.

The Amman press recently published a story of slavery among the refugees. A father, the press reported, found the only way to feed his family was to sell his 13-year-old daughter for $60.

Fireplace Remodeling Best Done in Early Fall

CLEVER use of paint, wall paper or draperies can disguise many structural defects in a home interior, but a badly designed fireplace usually calls for more drastic remedies.

If your fireplace is badly proportioned or cluttered with gingerbread, plan to remodel it before fall weather really sets in and the living room resumes its full importance in family activities, suggests a Tile Council of America report on home modernization.

Often it is the mantel shelf that spoils the design of a fireplace. Appraise it critically and decide whether it is the right height, width and length. Raising or lowering it a few inches will often greatly improve the appearance of the whole fireplace.

If the mantel is massive or badly proportioned, the fireplace may need complete redesigning. For a large room, a good plan is to eliminate the mantel shelf entirely at that time and to carry the material for the fireplace facing from floor to ceiling.

Gingerbread or over-fancy work makes a fireplace mantel "busy" and oldfashioned in appearance. Often this raised work appears carved but is actually only mounted on the mantel and can be removed with a knife. A little filling and sanding, a coat of fresh paint, and, lo, the mantel will appear modern and new.

If a wooden mantel gets discolored by smoke or becomes charred, it is a real fire hazard and should be replaced as soon as possible. Framing the fireplace opening with a row of clay tile and fitting the mantel around the tile will make an attractive design and at the same time eliminate the hazard.

LET'S TALK ABOUT GARDENS

Need Constant Care

Budded 'Mums Held Good Garden Asset

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

IF your garden is a bit skimpy with blooms, a purchase of budded chrysanthemums is a good investment. Moved with care and kept watered, they will soon blossom and give the garden the added lift it needs. In spring the plant can be divided—insuring an increase in plants and ample blooms.

Chrysanthemums need consistent care, but only a small amount of "pampering." No flower adds more to garden beauty and are so generous in bloom.

A spare bed away from the rest of the garden is a good idea. It can keep other beds supplied with pinch hitting plants, when failures occur in planned borders. Such a bed is good for keeping small spring plants, such as creeping phlox when they have finished blooming, and then transplanting them back to the border in the fall. It is a plan carried out by many gardeners of large estates where flower beds are on constant display.

Try Something New

A GARDEN should never stand still horticulturally. New plant material should be added yearly and improvements on old favorites tried.

Tritoma is one flower seldom used, yet it points up a garden wherever seen. The old "Red Hot Poker" is scarcely recognizable in its many new and lovely shades. We have seen a number of prize winning arrangements this year which owed their distinction to these flowers which now come in white, pale yellow, coral, orange, and the old familiar red.

In beds they remain in bloom a long time and hold up well when cut. A native of Africa, they were first brought to Europe in the eighteenth century. The bulbs, which should be set now, must be planted where they will get full sun with the tip of crown at the surface. There are new dwarf hybrids—the Kniphofia rufa. These small plants are suitable for rock gardens or in beds where only small material is used.

"IF you can grow delphinium, try baptisia." This we heard at a flower show this year from an onlooker admiring the foliage in an arrangement class entry. A member of the pea family, the "false indigo," as it is commonly known, has blossoms of true indigo blue which come in June and July.

The blossoms, beautiful as they are, are greatly enhanced by the foliage which is lovely from spring until fall. Not a rank grower, it does not need frequent resetting; in fact, nurserymen suggest that it should not be moved unless necessary.

The best way to find out about new plants is by visiting local nurseries or by attending flower shows, particularly where amateurs exhibit. Here you will not only find the flowers and plants but many expert amateur gardeners who are glad to pass along word of their successes and failures.

Shows Coming Up

THE coming show in Alexandria, which will be held at the community center on September 24, is sponsored by six garden clubs, among whose membership are many expert gardeners of northern Virginia; specimens and arrangements will be exceptionally good.

Interest in dahlia growing is climaxed each year in Washington with the annual Dahlia Show sponsored by the National Capital Dahlia Society. Last year there was an attendance of more than 13,000 in the two days of the exhibit. This year, as last, the show will be held in the Botanic Garden on Saturday and Sunday.

Many of the classes are open to all growers, in groups for those who grow a hundred or less to those who have large gardens of 250. Others are open to all growers. A special section is reserved for the novice who has never won an award at any dahlia show.

An international flavor is being given the show by an exhibit of new dahlias from Holland. Since the war the Dutch growers have been particularly interested in the growing of dahlias and many of the flowers exhibited by local growtions.

Just Follow the Rules

You Can Force Blooms On Winter Daffodils

By Alfred Putz

FORCING daffodils to bloom indoors in winter is not hard. However, there are certain rules.

They do not like indoor temperatures of 70 degrees or higher. Temperatures they like best are 40 degrees for root formation, 50 degrees for foliage development and 60 degrees for unfolding the best flowers.

In case the buds are too slow to make a certain date, they may be subjected to 70 degrees, but only after the buds are well formed. Occasionally commercial growers apply even higher temperatures to the buds, but that shortens their lasting quality considerably.

These are the ideal temperatures and anything reasonably close will do. The 40-degree period is best spent outdoors. Eleven weeks, on the average, are required for the plant to make a strong root system at that favorite temperature, so that an early start is needed if they are wanted for midwinter blooming.

How to Start Bulbs

TO START them, take a five or six-inch bulb pan and place a curved piece of crock over the drainage hole. If only a flowerpot is available, fill its lower third with pebbles, cinders or coarse sand, with a thin layer of peatmoss on top. Use a good, spongy, slightly acid garden soil enriched with a little pulverized cow manure and superphosphate. Place the bulbs about an inch apart with the neck at the soil surface. Allow at least a half-inch depression to facilitate watering. Plant moderately firm.

If a coldframe is on hand, put them in it after potting, give a good watering, cover with a half-inch of sand, besides filling the space between the containers with sand, and add four inches of soil over the top.

With no coldframe, place them in a square hole dug deep enough to take a three-inch layer of coarse sand or cinders, the height of the containers, an inch for the sand and four inches more for the soil cover. When freezing temperatures have turned the soil surface to an icy crust, cover with six inches of salt hay or straw and add a little additional soil to keep it in place.

40 Degrees

THOSE in the coldframe need no straw, but the glass sash is put on with a crack left for ventilation. Cover the glass with a burlap bag to keep the sun out and avoid temperature rise.

But how do you know that the bulbs have the required 40 degrees? You do not, but you need not worry about it. The same varieties get along in the garden at whatever temperature winter brings and they will do the same in the coldframe or pit, which simulate garden conditions.

Mark your calendar for 11 weeks after potting. When that time arrives, or a little later, dig up a pan or two to examine the root growth. Bring the roots into view by inverting the pan or pot, knocking its edge on a firm support and holding your hand over the soil while the pot is lifted.

If the roots have curled well around the outside of the soil ball the plant is ready for its second period; otherwise it is returned to the rooting quarters. At that time it is well to group them according to the quantity of roots each has made to simplify later inspections.

Beware of Frost

BEWARE of opening the pit or frame during bitter cold winter weather. They will not go bad even if kept considerably longer in the pit, but to expose them to severe frost will hurt them badly.

The next step is to find a place where the temperature runs around 50 degrees. A cellar, an unheated porch, a shed are likely places. They do not need nor want light for several days. That brings out the foliage. When the leaves are about three or four inches long, place them in the light, where they will soon turn rich green.

An average of three weeks is required for the leaves to make a strong growth and for the flowerbuds to appear. The latter are the sign that they are ready for their third period, which calls for 60 degrees. If it is 65 degrees no harm will be done. Take a reliable thermometer to find the window or windows nearest to this temperature. You will be surprised how cool it is close to the window as compared with the rest of the room. A 10-degree drop during the night also is good for them.

Not all daffodils force equally well, but Golden Spur and Golden Harvest are especially easy as well as early. Helios is another good one, and so are Emperor, Empress and King Alfred.

Expert on Dried Flowers Explains How It's Done

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Sept. 17—Now's the time to collect flowers and materials for winter flower arrangements.

Mrs. John R. Fisher, who has rediscovered the colonial art of dried flower arrangements for the winter months and brought it into widespread modern use, says that the summer months are the ideal time to find the brightest materials—flowers, leaves and grasses—for cold-weather bouquets.

Schooled by a decade of flower arranging for the historic exhibition buildings of the restored city, Mrs. Fisher recommends that flowers be picked just before full bloom, and "fluff up," retaining both bloom and color.

After cutting, the flowers should be taken into a dark room, where the temperature is kept slightly warmer than outside. Hang them in bunches upside down, making sure that there is no dampness in the room. It will take several weeks to dry the flowers completely, depending on the type.

Grasses and leaves are gathered towards the end of summer and into the early fall. The branches of leaves are placed between papers in layers, and a framework with weights on top. The height of the pile makes no difference, but it is important that no two leaves overlap and that the branches still have sap. So fixed, they will dry in about six weeks. Ferns also are placed between papers and pressed, but grasses are placed in jars to dry with their natural curves.

Wild and cultivated flowers are gathered all through the summer. At the present time, Mrs. Fisher is gathering goldenrod, straw-flowers, amaranthus, statice, ageratum, blazing star, Chinese lantern, pearly everlasting, joepye weed, boneset, butterweed, cattails and honesty, as well as seed pods, wheat and corn tassels.

Try Basement, Garage

Enjoy 'Winter' Garden By Storing Surplus

By James H. Beattie

AUTUMN and the virtual end of the growing season finds many gardens with a surplus of products that may be stored for later use.

High-grade, permanent storage facilities, capable of keeping products in excellent condition for long periods may be an excellent investment, but very good results may be obtained through simple facilities found around the average home.

Economy and convenience may result from the use of a basement corner, the space under the back porch, or in the garage. The cost of preparing the storage space may be very small.

From Garden to Market

PROFITABLE home storage is not limited to keeping surplus garden vegetables. Those having suitable facilities for keeping fresh products often find it a convenience and it is economical to buy apples, potatoes and other products suitable for home storage in quantity lots.

Regardless of the storage site used, temperature and humidity control are very important in keeping fruits and vegetables. Potatoes and many other products require protection from strong light. Unless these basic requirements can be met it may be unwise to attempt extensive home storage.

Storing Apples

LOCAL dealers and nearby Maryland and Virginia orchards present an opportunity this autumn to obtain apples at very low prices. Only well colored, insect and disease free fruit should be used for storage.

Before selecting apples for storage it is a wise plan to cut a few specimens to insure that the bulk of the fruit is free from insect infestation. Grimes Golden and Yellow Delicious varieties are suitable only for fall storage under natural conditions, but if placed in cold storage their keeping period is greatly extended. Winesap, Staymen Winesap and York Imperial are excellent sorts for home storage.

Apples require a low storage temperature, as near 32 degrees as possible. Sudden dips in the air temperature below this point do no harm for the fruit "under cools" without freezing. Even if frozen and left to thaw without being disturbed, apples are not seriously injured unless the freezing is repeated.

Shriveling, due to the loss of moisture, is a common source of trouble with apples. It can be guarded against and its effects greatly reduced by keeping the fruit in reasonably tight containers such as non-ventilated bushel baskets, placed in a cool dark place and covered with a light canvas. Occasional light sprinkling will help in reducing evaporation.

The corner of a cool basement, with nearby open window, or a corner of the garage usually provides suitable storage space for apples. This fruit should not be stored close to potatoes and certain root crops as they may absorb odors.

Know Your Onions

ONLY sound, well-matured onions should be stored. This vegetable is seldom stored in the basement, but it keeps very well if placed in an open mesh bag hung on the garage wall. Washington winters are usually so mild that there is little danger from freezing when stored in the average garage. If frozen and allowed to thaw without being disturbed little harm will result; however, repeated freezing and thawing should be avoided.

Potatoes and Root Crops

THE storage of potatoes, carrots, turnips and similar vegetables is exceedingly simple. Neither too hot or too cold is a good rule to follow. Forty degrees is a good storage temperature for this class of product. Potatoes must not be allowed to become too cold or they will become sweet and unpalatable.

All these vegetables store well in a cool basement, an outdoor storage pit, and, for a portion of the winter, in the garage. When only small quantities are to be stored, a barrel laid on its side and covered with straw and earth, using a board for a door, is quite satisfactorv.

Pumpkins and Squashes

MODERATELY warm storage conditions are required by this group. Winter varieties of pumpkins and squashes that are well-matured and free from insect injury will usually keep well when placed on shelves in the basement where the temperature is from 50 to 60 degrees.

Sweet potatoes storage is relatively simple. They must be dug before they are chilled in the soil. Digging as soon as the tops are killed by frost is a safe rule to follow. Careful handling to avoid cutting or bruising is necessary. The roots should be placed in baskets or crates and stored on a shelf over or near the furnace where an air temperature of about 85 degrees can be maintained for 8 to 10 days.

Unfortunately, home heating equipment may not be in constant use at the time when sweet potatoes are harvested and in cases of this sort other provision should be made for providing heat during the 10-day period after harvesting.

After the curing period is over the crates should be moved to a location where the temperature will be 50 to 55 degrees for the storage period. High humidity, about 80 to 85 per cent, during the storage period is favorable to the keeping of this vegetable. A burlap sack hung over the crates or baskets, with a corner in a shallow pan of water will aid in keeping the humidity conditions at a satisfactory level.

Built-in Buffet Saves Scarce Dining Space

To save valuable space in the dining area, build in a sill-height buffet beneath a group of two or three windows the full width of the windows. Place glass shelves across the windows on which to display china and prized glassware. Use the top of the buffet for display of large pottery and silver pieces. Hang narrow draperies no wider than the window frames they are to cover. Give the room a smart, modern appearance by installing a black asphalt tile floor divided into 3-foot squares by white strips of the material 2 inches wide, and use no rugs.

Manhattan Experts Furnish Model Suite

NEW YORK CITY (NYHT).—Portraits of eighteenth century gentlemen and museum cases of fine silver and porcelain were the backdrop recently for a busy round of furniture building, screen printing and rug weaving. The setting was the Staten Island Museum, on Stuyvesant pl., where a team of housewife volunteers put finishing touches on the interior furnishings for a model apartment at South Beach Houses, one of three New York City Housing Authority apartment projects on the island.

The Staten Island Museum, a small institution with a budget to consider, took responsibility for all adult recreational and educational undertakings for the three projects. That means, for example, that the working committee will be on hand at South Beach to teach new tenants how they can furnish their own apartments in the way the model home was done. They will give courses in screen painting, stencil decoration of furniture and decorative accessories, rug weaving and the like.

For the first model apartment, which was formally opened September 12, a committee of 12 persons was formed, headed by Mrs. Doris Jones. Jean Leason, art curator for the museum, and Alice Reichenbach, also of the museum staff, are jointly responsible for the three projects. Volunteer workers on the committee include several women who also teach handcraft and art courses as part of the women's educational program.

Women Pooled Their Talents

A VARIETY of talents and skills is represented in the little team. Mrs. Lola Gerow contributed one of her own water colors to the apartment. Mrs. Alice Rietmeyer hand painted decorations on a writing desk; Mrs. Margaret Giro wove an Oriental style rug for one of the rooms, while Mrs. Sylvia Pederson painted floral decorations on a complete dinette set of black lacquer, as well as decorating metal trays and small wooden salad bowls for serving and for wall decorations. Mrs. Helen Friedman screen-printed design motifs for window curtains and furniture in a boy's room, and Sherell Weinstein, a young student, gave up her vacation afternoons to help with the project.

The women tried to approximate the situation of new tenants furnishing a home. They dug a bed, one or two chests of drawers, a table and a few chairs out of their attics, assuming that these pieces the couple would have or would buy second-hand. They bought a new set of living room furniture from a Staten Island store and also bought a rug and draperies for this room, figuring that a young couple would want to devote most of their money to the living room.

Cutting down, sanding and stenciling of furniture and the making of draperies and bedspreads was done at the museum. Committee members would arrive with pieces to donate for the apartment, such as an old copper coffee urn that was turned into a lamp and a wood salt box that became a plant container.

Colors Keyed to Green Walls

COLOR scheme for the home had to be keyed to a pale green, the wall shade for the whole apartment. In the living room, it is accented by a brown and green lounge chair. A plain-colored rug and draperies which will run the length of one wall will carry out the brown and green color theme. Draperies will be hung on a jiffy-john rod.

Black lacquered furniture, stencil-trimmed in bright colors, and natural wood wall plaques, with the same gay floral trim, contrast with the light green walls in the dinette. Indian brown and beige were the color choices for the children's room.

For the master bedroom a somewhat more unusual scheme was chosen. Furniture was bleached, sanded and rubbed down, then lacquered white and given an antique finish. One of the artists on the committee worked a hand-painted ivy design onto the fronts of some of the pieces. Draperies, bedspread and vanity skirt were handmade out of a floral chintz, with apricot flowers on a soft gray ground.

furnished by Miller Furniture Co. of Arlington. The section is located in a subdivision of higher priced homes, with one nearby home costing $250,000.

A home built from a Better Homes and Garden plan has drawn loyal readers to Hillcrest Heights, in nearby Prince Georges County, Md., where Builder John O. Aylor has erected a modern Cape Cod selling for $24,000. Aylor said some visitors had traveled from out-of-State communiies to view the duplication of the magazine's "five-star" plan.

An estimated crowd of 4000 last Sunday viewed the W. C. & A. N. Miller house in Spring Valley, D. C. The firm termed the attendance an extraordinarily fine reaction. Weewday crowds began arriving in the early afternoon with large crowds reported each evening.

All homes will open today at 10 a. m. and remain open for public inspection until dark. There is no admission charge to any home. The housing exhibit closes Sunday night, October 2.

Store Surplus Vegetables

Many gardeners set a few tomato plants about July 1 to supply fruits suitable for autumn storage. Smooth, disease-free specimens that have reached practically full size may be gathered in the green stage, just before frost, and stored for a few weeks with a fair degree of success.

The quality of these green-picked tomatoes is not equal to the vine-ripened material, but it is superior to the average commercial product. Wrapping in plain paper and placing on a shelf or in a shallow box in a cool basement usually results in satisfactory ripening.

Detailed information on the home storage of fruits and vegetables may be obtained from Farmer's Bulletin No. 1939, "Home Storage of Vegetables and Fruits." A copy may be obtained from Information, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington 25, D. C.

2 Missouri Plants to Convert Coal to Oils

Louisiana, Mo. (U.P.).—The Bureau of Mines will dedicate two new coal-to-oil demonstration plants, forerunners of a new basic industry for the United States, on May 8 at Louisiana.

First of their kind in this country, the plants will employ different processes to convert coal and lignite into high quality synthetic liquid fuels. Ultimately it will free us from dependence on foreign oil sources, Interior Secretary J. A. Krug said in announcing the dedication plans.

The plants are being built at a combined cost of 15 million dollars to serve as a proving ground for American coals, equipment and processing methods.

The site for the demonstration plants, centrally located with respect to the Nation's major coal fields, was chosen after a Nation-wide survey in which 206 proposed locations in 21 coal-producing States were considered.

A determining factor in the selection of Louisiana was the availability here of the Army's Missouri ordnance works, a war-time synthetic ammonia plant which offered facilities and services readily convertible to synthetic fuel production.

The new plants will demonstrate the respective merits of two basic processes for converting coal to oil. The first is by the direct hydrogenation process, the second by the gas synthesis process. The processes are complementary, rather than competitive, and the liquid products each is best equipped to produce range from heavy fuel oils for ships and industry to jet fuels

Home Hints

Fit Kitchen Color Plan to Natural Light

IF A KITCHEN is sunny, use deep tones of yellow, pink or blue or pale tints of blue or green for the walls. Select colors for the grease-resistant asphalt tile floor that repeat the wall color. Accent the floor tiles with a 2-inch border stripe of the flooring material in red or black.

If the kitchen is on the north side of the house where little sunlight reaches it, choose warm yellow, orange or pink and avoid blue or green, which are "cool" colors. For the asphalt tile floor, work out a clever design using yellow tiles accented by red tiles and striping.

Bright Floor Provides Color in White Kitchen

Save money by purchasing all-white kitchen cabinets and other equipment, which costs considerably less than colored, and use the floor and walls to provide needed color at low cost. This is easy with the wide range of colors and interesting designs that can be created by using tiles and narrow strips of the material in contrasting colors.

Paint the walls to harmonize—sunshine yellow if the predominant floor color is blue; pink if beige tiles are used for the floor. Use black squares to accent light-colored tile; light green to accent dark gray.

Narrow Kitchen Can Appear Wider

Modernize an old-fashioned narrow kitchen, which has the sink at one end, by placing floor cabinets at each side of the sink to extend completely across the wall at that end of the room. This gives the room better proportions and makes it appear wider. Tie together open shelves above the sink with a valance board extending across their tops from wall to wall. Cover the sink splashboard and work surfaces at either side with bright red plastic.

Install beige marbleized grease-resistant asphalt tile flooring with narrow darker stripes extending crosswise of the room to brighten up the kitchen and give it width. Paint the walls, woodwork and ceiling pale coffee color. Install fluorescent tubing behind the over-sink valance board and a ceiling fluorescent fixture for over-all illumination.

Colonial Atmosphere Adds Spice to Kitchen

Use unpainted natural finish pine cupboards with large black H-hinges to put colonial atmosphere into the kitchen. Build a board-and-batten outside entrance door with Z-shaped cross-bracing to further carry out the Colonial theme. Paint window and door frames white. Wax the unpainted cabinets to preserve the natural beauty of the wood and make cleaning easy.

Work out a Colonial floor pattern by using tan and dark brown tiles installed in a pattern simulating random-length sections to create the appearance of the old-time plank floor. Hang white ruffled cottage curtains at the windows and frame open wall shelves with quaint Colonial scalloped boards.

Insulate as You Build

INSULATING a home need not be expensive. Today, builders are using insulation materials that also build, such as insulating board sheathing and insulating board lath. These dual purpose products do two jobs at one cost.

In existing homes, modernization experts are using various types of decorative insulating tileboards for ceilings and insulating board planks and building boards for walls. These materials can be applied easily and quickly over old walls and ceilings.

Pulse, Inc., Rates As Super-Hooper

By Sonia Stein

HAD your pulse taken lately? If not lately, perhaps soon. So give a thought to the etiquette decreed for "respondents" having their pulses taken by the "aided recall roster method."

This particular pulse measurement is concerned only with the rate and manner in which you turn your radio dial.

The Pulse, Inc. which recently published the first of its bi-monthly reports for the Washington metropolitan area, considers its methods to be of unparalleled vitrue, primarily because it expects its "respondents" to report themselves as listeners to only those programs to which they were paying a modicum of attention. In fact, they assume that unless you were paying some attention, you'll be in no position to remember what you were listening to several hours later when the Pulse interviewer comes to call.

Pulse doesn't figure you were listening to Fulton Lewis, jr., that time you had your foot caught in the mustard bath and couldn't conveniently cross the room to shut him off. Unless, that is, you were alert to what was going on at the time and actually remembered hearing him.

And if you were immersed in Mary Haworth's column in The Washington Post at 8:15 a. m. the Pulse method presumably wouldn't record that you were listening to whatever radio program was mumbling an obbligato in your home at that hour. Unless, be it understood, you were paying it enough heed to remember it.

Outrates Hooper

THIS, you see, has an advantage over the Hooper telephone survey which may arouse you from your preoccupation sufficiently so that you report that you are listening to the program which is rending the air at that moment whether you are actually listening to it or not.

It has a clear advantage over the method in which mechanical whizgigs are planted in your radio set to record exactly which station you are tuned to, minute by minute, although you may have your ears filled with cotton against the shrieks of your little son's penny whistle or your great aunt Agatha's persistent chatter even as the gadget insists you are listening to "Invitation to Learning."

The personal interview-roster method which Pulse uses, records "psychological" rather than mere physical listening, the Pulse people claim. What happens when a wise guy insists he was listening to the ball game when he was actually a wet glob of tears listening to "John's Orphaned Offspring," Pulse doesn't say.

Back on Air Tonight

ALICE FAYE
. . . plays herself

THE fall programs are returning to the scene too rapidly to keep track of, but one not-to-be-missed event is the rearrival of Phil Harris and Frankie Remley at 7:30 tonight (WRC-NBC). Remley actually exists and is the guitar player in Harris' orchestra and his bosom companion as indicated in the weekly sketch, but he's so "shy" that actor Elliot Lewis portrays him on the air. Frankie shy!

The Harris children are also played by professional actors since they are also shy, according to their mother, and hide behind her in company. Mrs. Harris, it need hardly be pointed out, is played by Mrs. Harris, otherwise known as Alice Faye.

Lads Rout Lassies in Film Poll

By Richard L. Coe

EVERY SEPTEMBER the Motion Picture Herald, pulse-taker of The Industry, polls the land's box offices to find the most promising of the screen's newcomers.

This year's list has two outstanding features:

Of 10 names, only 3 are girls.

In every case stage training was the door to Hollywood.

The fact that so many males made so big a dent at the box office isn't exactly a new trend, because past years showed a strong tendency that way, though none was so heavily weighted toward the male animal. However, it's clear that what America's sweethearts prefer in the movies are guys.

The stage training business proves once again that catching some Hollywood mogul's eye while you mix him a milk shake is not the road to fame and fortune.

Here's the list in order of exhibitors' choices:

1. Montgomery Clift.
2. Kirk Douglas.
3. Betty Garrett.
4. Paul Douglas.
5. Howard Duff.
6. Pedro Armendariz.
7. Dean Stockwell.
8. Wanda Hendrix.
9. Wendell Corey.
10. Barbara Bel Geddes.

Captures Feminine Vote

CLIFT has been the sensation of the year. He's made only two pictures, "The Search" and "Red River," released in that order, but filmed in reverse. For some inscrutable reason, the girls latched on to Monty and when he switched from the sensitive sergeant of "The Search" to the rambunctious cowboy of "Red River," he was in. His next is as the fortune hunter of "The Heiress" and whether or not it's the fine picture Paramount hopes it is, Monty's name will draw the coins.

His movie triumph seems to me well deserved. Almost ostentatiously, he avoids the ostentation of Hollywood, turning down parts like crazy, roams Europe at will, sticks to his walk-up apartment in New York whenever he settles down. His thoroughly mature attitude toward what has been thought "quick success" has the movie magnates baffled. They're used to having their gilded children cash in quick.

My first meeting with Monty, now 28, was in one of those big corner rooms of the Willard, where he had breakfast while he was acting at the National with Nazimova in Capek's "The Mother." That was 10 years ago and while I immediately admired the guy I never thought he'd become the joy of lassies then just struggling through the first grade.

Launched at Fourteen

HE TOLD me that acting was for him, that he'd been on the stage since he was 14, when he'd done a little theater work in Florida. He'd had a straw hat tryout with Thomas Mitchell in a comedy, "Fly Away Home," went with it to Broadway. Then he was in a musical, "Jubilee," then in "Dame Nature" for the Theater Guild.

"The Mother" didn't do so well, but Monty came back to the National with the Lunts in "There Shall Be No Night," in which he played their idealistic son. It was a mighty moving performance and kept him busy several seasons. Then came "The Skin of Our Teeth," another long run, a revival of "Our Town," "The Searching Wind," "Foxhole in the Parlor" and "You Touched Me," the latter two short-lived.

His family is comfortably off, but he's got a solid attitude toward money. Independent as they come, he dresses mighty informally, talks to whoever interests him and takes his career seriously. If he keeps up his independent ways he may become one of our truly fine actors of the future.

Kirk Douglas, No. 2 man with the exhibitors, also seems to have had a quick success, but it's followed the mixed struggles of getting along on the stage. He's 33, from up-State New York, did carnival wrestling, bell-hopping, waiting and ushering to push him through dramatic school after graduating from St. Lawrence. Minor roles with Grace George, Katharine Cornell and Judith Anderson led to a lead in Broadway's "Kiss and Tell."

'Champion' Wins Stardom

BEFORE "Champion," which rated him the vote, he'd had any number of screen parts, but by working in that modestly budgeted fight yarn, made himself a star.

Betty Garrett, who's about 30, was around New York for years. Everybody liked Betty, but she took a long pull to get going. She was chantootsie in any number of night spots before getting into a show. Beginnings were modest, but by the end of '46, "Call Me Mister" had her on the map for that "South America, Take It Away" number. Her Olsen and Johnson stint in "Laffing Room Only" did her a lot of good, too.

Her first picture was Margaret O'Brien's "Big City," in which she had one of the energetic song numbers that stood out above the treacle. That led her to "Words and Music," "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" and "Neptune's Daughter."

Paul Douglas, a mature fellow, admits it's taken 25 years since he played Shylock at the age of 13 to make the grade. While he was doing it, he found radio's sports spots a fine living. You probably heard him a lot in those days, but acting was what he wanted. Garson Kanin gave him the chance as the rollicking hero of "Born Yesterday," which he played for three years before drifting into "A Letter to Three Wives." In this he registered as a new personality right off the bat and you'll see him next with his "Wives" partner, Linda Darnell, in "Everybody Does It."

He Muscled In

HOWARD DUFF is another radio recruit, but that followed his hopes for Broadway stardom. Howard, who's 32, thought he might be a cartoonist until he played "Richard III" at school. He went to Seattle's Repertory Playhouse, working his way by radio announcing. It was probably his "Sam Spade, Detective" on the CBS network that pushed him furtherest. He's majored in action stuff on the screen, playing in "Brute Force," "Naked City," "Red Canyon," "Calamity Jane and Sam Bass" and "Illegal Entry." You'll see Howard next week at the Capitol in "Johnny Stool Pigeon."

For his appearance in only three American pictures, Pedro Armendariz rates sixth place in the top 10 newcomers. But before "Tulsa," "The Fugitive" and "The Pearl," Pedro made 42 Spanish films in Mexico between 1935-44. Born in Mexico, he went to school in Texas and has since shuttled back and forth between the two countries, which probably accounts for his adaptability. As a character actor, he should last a long, long time.

Youngest of the group is Dean Stockwell, son of musical comedy's Harry Stockwell, whom you may have seen play "Oklahoma!" at the National. Dean's 12, but he's made 15 pictures and all his parts have shown a remarkably unself-conscious youngster with real command of make believe.

She's Got It

FLORIDA'S Wanda Hendrix, 21, has had the most direct Hollywood entry of the 10 She did a little theater work in Jacksonville, was spotted there by a Warner talent scout and joined Charles Boyer in "Confidential Agent" at 15. Outstanding as the little Mexican girl in "Ride the Pink Horse" under Robert Montgomery's able direction, Wanda's certainly got that extra something. She's married to Audie Murphy, the young war hero.

Wendell Corey, 34, took the New England, straw hat circuit to Hollywood, after carving a sound stage career. "Dream Girl" on the stage opposite Betty Field led him to "Desert Fury," "The Search," "Sorry, Wrong Number" and "Any Number Can Play," among others. He emphasizes character rather than romantic stuff and stands to be a reliable player.

It's something of a surprise to find Barbara Bel Geddes on the exhibitors' list, for Barbara's not done much since "The Long Night," "I Remember Mama," "Blood on the Moon" and "Caught." Last I heard, RKO had dropped her option and she was in New York looking for "that play." The daughter of Designed Norman Bel Geddes, Barbara's background is solidly intelligent. That she's on the list is a good reflection of the taste of the moviegoers.

Goldbergs Lead A 'Triple' Life

GERTRUDE BERG
. . . and part of her phantom family

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

GERTRUDE BERG, creator and star of the Goldbergs, lives a triple life, scampering between three addresses: On radio and television two nights a week, as Mollie Goldberg, she lives in the Bronx at 1038 East Tremont ave.

In hopes of digging up some nostalgic angle on her story, we drove up to that address. If there were a 1038, it would be where five streets meet under the elevated at one of the noisiest crossroads of the Bronx.

But as Gertrude Berg she is very much at home in the winter on Park ave. and in the summer at Bedford Hills, 50 miles and many generations north of the city. We drove through the Bronx and on to Bedford Hills,

HOUSTON, TEX.—Attorney Fred Munch said that when he was five years old, his father gave him this advice: "Son, never ask a man where he's from. If he's from Texas, he'll tell you. If he's not, don't embarrass him." After a weekend in the Lone Star State, I can understand the pertinence of that statement. We came; we saw, and we were conquered.

George Jessel and I flew in from Hollywood for the giant hat fashion show and auction for the benefit of the Variety Clubs, called "The Heart of Show Business." The members are raising money to build a boys' club here.

The "Heart City" gave $32,000 in two nights of dinners and hat auctions at the famous Shamrock Hotel. George and I auctioned off some very fancy headgear.

Underestimated $17,000

WE had hoped to raise $15,000 for the boys' club, and we were all excited when we more than doubled the amount.

There are thousands of reasons for Houston's success. One is the complete cooperation of all the citizens. They really believe in making it all for one and one for all. My column appears here in the Post, Will and Oveta Hobby's paper. But on the front page of a rival newspaper was a picture and story of my arrival here. An earthquake couldn't get me that kind of coverage at home.

Twenty top American hat designers made personal appearances at the show. It was their night. Beautiful Houston girls, mostly of high school age, modeled clothes, furs, and jewels from leading establishments. But the spotlight belonged to the mad hatters. The chapeau auction brought in $8100 the first night.

Three Strauss Operas Stand for the Ages

By Paul Hume

RICHARD STRAUSS lived 40 years after writing the last music for which he became world famous.

In 1910 he completed Der Rosenkavalier, his most popular opera. Rosenkavalier also turned out to be the last piece of music he wrote to achieve any broad acclaim similar to that given Salome, Elektra, and the orchestral tone poems and songs.

This does not mean that Strauss did not write some beautiful and perhaps even great music in the second half of his life.

Rosa Raisa, Chicago's great dramatic soprano, and one of the world's greatest singers, once told me that the opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten" was greater than the three well-known works. And Raisa had reason to know, having sung the Marschallin in Rosenkavalier in both Italian and German, as well as the leading role in the "Frau," or the Woman Without a Shadow.

But that opera, dating from 1919, has never been heard in this country. It would be worthy novelty for an enterprising company, but have we any such company today?

Ariadne Stands Up

OF THE remaining operas, only Ariadne auf Naxos has lasted in American hearings. The Metropolitan Opera has neglected it completely but New York's City Center company has found it a good draw for several seasons and is playing it again this fall. The Met, on the other hand, mounted The Egyptian Helen, by Strauss, for a

MOSS HART KITTY CARLISLE

AN UNUSUAL event will take place tomorrow night at the Olney Theater, where Mr. and Mrs. Moss Hart—she is Kitty Carlisle—will play a preopening benefit of his comedy, "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

The performance will aid the American Memorial Foundation, whose purpose is to establish a national community center in Washington. A theater, opera, auditorium and exhibition center is planned as a "living memorial" to the members of the armed forces.

Members of the foundation's board include business, labor, educational, religious, theatrical, musical and civic representatives. It is planned to appeal to the Nation's great private fortunes as well as to the general public for funds.

First of what will be a long list of entertainment world benefits for the fund will be tomorrow's special Olney performance.

Official opening of the Harts' popular comedy will find the Tuesday night regulars on hand to welcome the coauthor and his musical comedy star wife. Hart wrote "The Man" with George S. Kaufman and it ranks as one of the lasting comedies of the American theater. Monty Wooley created the part 10 years ago and was followed in it by Clifton Webb, Taylor Holmes and Alexander Woollcott, the vocative critic who inspired "The Man."

The Olney's cast is an extremely fine one by any standard, with Rex O'Malley, Matt Briggs and Joan Wetmore among those featured. Two Washington radio stars will be making their only Olney appearances of the season—Evelyn Freyman, coproducer of Olney and WTOP's popular, lively Hazel Markell.

Olney's downtown box office is in Jordan's, 13th and G sts.

Col. Jim Eskew Rodeo To Storm Into Uline's

SEATS for the Col. Jim Eskew J-E Ranch Rodeo, opening at Uline's Arena Monday the 26th, will go on sale tomorrow morning at the Fairway, 1328 G st., and at the Uline box office.

The rodeo will headline champion cowboys and cowgirls bestriding the livestock and a personal appearance by Baritone Ken Curtis and the "Sons of the Pioneers," who'll sing Western melodies they've made famous with Roy Rogers.

Among the songs will be "Bed Full of Roses," "Cool Water" and "Tumblin' Tumbleweeds." Curtis and the "Pioneers" have appeared in all Roy Rogers' pictures and with him on his last personal appearance tour.

The rodeo will continue through Sunday, October 2, with matinee performances Saturday and Sunday.

G-String Note

Birds, Nails Abet Foreign Strip-Teaser

LONDON (U.P.).—It's many a bump by air and a long grind by sea from Washington, D. C.'s Gayety Theater, but European G-string gals are cavorting today just like in American honky-tonks.

From London to Helsinki you can find them as bare-bosomed or as scantily clad as anywhere in America.

In Rome they disguise nudity as a scenic backdrop for comedy. In Paris they don't even bother to disguise it. In Stockholm it's against the law for performers to appear on the stage bare-bosomed, but they do anyway. In the Brussels bistros they run around in nothing at all.

Paris is the paradise, naturally, for the tourist who wants to gaze at unclad beauty.

In Oslo each summer producers have a non-stop, 24-hour girlie show for the period the midnight sun never quite sets on the Norwegian city.

In Belgium there are no open burlesque shows like the Midwest's "Burma Road" vaudeville circuit, but two night clubs there present bare-bosomed girls in G-strings going through the same bumps and grinds. Clandestine places present completely nude shows for an entrance fee of $8 to $20 a person.

Obliging Pigeons

BERLIN'S laws permit burlesque shows, but none is functioning now. But Frankfurt, home of United States occupation headquarters, has a number of night club burlesques. The girls wear G-strings the size of airmail stamps.

Switzerland has no permanent burlesque houses, such as Cleveland's, but many music halls present American-style burlesque shows with bubble dancers and girls who allow live pigeons and other feathered friends, especially trained for the purpose, to strip off their clothes.

Italian strippers have a new gimmick. No manual effort is required on the part of the girls. They brush conveniently past a nail stuck in the scenery which snags their scanty clothes and rips them right off their backs and other places.

The customers love it.

Moliere Classic

THE BARTER THEATER of Virginia will make its first appearance of the season at Arlington Farms Friday night, September 30.

Moliere's "The Imaginary Invalid," hit of the Barter's home season at Abingdon, will be the attraction. Reduced prices are available to Arlington Farms residents, with public sales downtown at Mrs. Stabler's Ticket Mart, in Jordan's, 13th and G sts.

Theater Wing Sponsor Of 'Philadelphia' Story

THE WASHINGTON HOSPITAL COMMITTEE of the American Theater Wing announces a special performance for its benefit of Sarah Churchill in "The Philadelphia Story," Monday night, the 26th, at the Olney Theater.

Jeffrey Lynn of film fame will be Miss Churchill's leading man in this final offering of the Olney's extended summer season.

Regular box office prices will prevail. Seats may be had from the American Theater Wing, 2020 Massachusetts ave.

in Hollywood. Maggi McNellis, looking like a pale blue bride, flew in from New York to do a fine job of commentating. George Jessel, as master of ceremonies, was in rare form.

Hard Going for Eddie

GEORGE and I telephoned Eddie Dowling, who collapsed with stomach ulcers while here to establish a theatre. He's okay now, but needed 22 blood transfusions to pull him through the crisis. But, as Jessel says, "if he ever gets all that Texas blood out of the State, he'll be a rich man. It's 90% oil."

We're staying at the Shamrock. Glenn McCarthy could have built the hotel in any city in the world, but he chose Houston. He can see his oil wells from practically every window in the place. The hotel, originally constructed on the edge of wilderness, is now surrounded by a city. I'm still trying to see all of it.

When I arrived, the Shamrock was taken over by thousands of Shriners, who had come from all parts of Texas. All I could see was an undulating sea of fezes.

One fez, named Al from Waco, said he'd bring an elephant into the lobby if I'd ride it. I told him I would. But he didn't come through with his end of the bargain.

A Million's Small Change

HOUSTONIANS both earn their money and spend it here. One man, after being made an honorary member of a medical fraternity, donated 160 million dollars to a cancer foundation for the city. Membership in one club is restricted to oil men with a Bradstreet rating of—not millions—but multi, multi, multi millions. That seems to be the only snobbery in town. One million won't even get you through the club's door.

One cattle rancher has a 3000-acre lake on his land. Each year he has a shooting meet for his friends; and enough game is killed to supply the whole State. Most of these folks are interested in magic. I should think they would be; but their tricks are done without cards. I've about decided I'm living in the wrong city. In Hollywood we live off imagination. Here anything you imagine comes true.

Gadsby Group Exhumes 'The Suspicious Husband'

ALEXANDRIA'S annual Gadsby's Tavern revival opens a two-week run tomorrow night at the historic old ballroom under the banner of the Little Theater of Alexandria.

This year's play is "The Suspicious Husband," by Dr. Ben Hoadly, written in 1747 and once performed in young America by "a company of players lately of the Covent Garden Theater, London." The revival's company is recruited from members of Alexandria's Little.

As has been the custom of the previous three revivals, Gadsby's Tavern will not limit its olden entertainment to candlelight. You are met at the door by link boys, greeted in the hall by hostesses, registered with the innkeeper and shown to your seats by serving maids. Before each performnace begins, Gen. and Mrs. George Washington are escorted to their seats of honor in company with her two children, John and Patsy Custis. Refreshments are served in the interval.

Special nights for Army-Navy-Air Force, Alexandria, Federal, British Empire, United Nations, District of Columbia and Old Virginia have been set aside. Further details may be had from Mrs. Marvin L. Parler, 3206 Circle Hill rd., Alexandria, telephone TEmple 2747.

Brockman's Concert Is Week's Only One

ONE CONCERT this week:

Thomas Brockman, pianist, 8 tonight, National Gallery.

Rameau: Suites; Mozart: Sonata in D Major; Hindemith: Sonata No. 3; Ravel: Ondine; Stravinsky: Danse Russe; Brahms: Two Intermezzi and Capriccio; Chopin: Two Preludes and F Minor Fantasy.

BROCKMAN

THE Columbia Opera Company has both good and unhappy news this week. Their good news: Gounod's Faust will be given Friday and Saturday, October 7 and 8, in Lisner Auditorium, beginning at 8:30 p. m.

Under the direction of Ethyl Manning, founder and sole director of the company, the opera will be given with full ballet chorus and orchestra.

Less welcome news is that this will be Mrs. Manning's last production in Washington. Shortly after the Faust performances, she is leaving for Detroit. The Columbia Opera Company has been presenting light and grand opera in Washington for 12 years, and last season gave highly successful versions of Carmen.

They are exponents of opera in English and work to achieve first, good translation, and second, singing to make the text understood.

Casts and further details will be announced next week. Tickets for Faust will go on sale this Wednesday at Stabler's Ticket Mart.

NATIONAL SYMPHONY notes: Sir Thomas Beecham, first guest conductor of the orchestra this season, will speak on Mozart during his visit to Washington. Time, place and date to be announced. Sir Thomas is one of the world's leading authorities on Mozart and his remarks should be not only witty but very much to the point.

The orchestra office announces that arrangements have been made in the Greater Washington area for residents of outlying districts to make their reservations for the coming season in their own neighborhood. Booths will be set up and manned, or womanned by members of the symphony's women's committee.

Hotels and stores granting space for the symphony booths include: the Wardman Park Hotel; Garfinckel's, Spring Valley; Tasty Bake Shop, Georgetown; Jelleff's, Shirlington; Chequire House, Alexandria; Hecht Co., Silver Spring; People's Drug Store, Chevy Chase, and Carbert's Jewelry Store in Bethesda.

The Bethesda Trade and Hobby Show, opening September 28, will also carry a booth.

The Symphony Student Forum will have a general meeting at 10 a. m., Saturday, September 24, in the symphony offices. Sixteen colleges in the vicinity are participating in this new venture. Incoming students may secure further information from Miss Wilkinson, at the symphony office.

The orchestra announces that four well known soloists will appear with the orchestra and the Washington Cathedral Choral Society in the Verdi Requiem in February under Paul Callaway. Ruth Diehl, soprano; Frances Lehnerts, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will carry the solo parts. Miss Diehl sang in the orchestra's all-Tschaikowsky program a year ago at the Watergate and has sung in Bach's B Minor Mass at Washington Cathedral.

Miss Lehnerts sang the annual American recital at the National Gallery last spring. Mr. Pease appeared with Miss Diehl in the Tschaikowsky program and both he and Mr. Lloyd have sung regularly with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in recent seasons.

THE YMCA announces the resumption of its annual recorded concerts on Tuesdays at 8 p. m. Robert Held is moderator of the programs.

Strauss' 'Second Half' Was Productive, Too

single season of five performances, chiefly because it owned Maria Jeritza, who sang in its premiere.

These works are curiously static compared to the constant richness of motion and lyric flow in Salome or Elektra. Over and over we hear the same vocal lines as in earlier scores. But they do not seem to arise from the stage situation as before. And there are longer and longer pages of padding, though few nineteenth century romantic composers can escape this charge.

Strauss can be regarded today as a great composer and a great innovator who made contributions enough in his great days to place him forever in the halls of music's greatest masters.

From him we have gems of unique and arresting quality: Don Juan, with its leaping enthusiasm and brilliant themes; Till Eulenspiegel, full of medieval mischief and studentism humor; Zarathustra, with one of the most stupendous opening pages in musical literature, and Don Quixote with its final pages of surpassing eloquence.

Great Use of Horns

STRAUSS brought new notes into music. His use of horns, learned from his gifted father, is stamped with his own style. His orchestration in page after page, in tone poem and opera, has a singular substance. In Heldenleben, his own biography in sound, and in Don Quixote, we have musical picture painting raised to its highest level.

Today we no longer cringe at the sounds of battle in the Hero's life, or snicker when Strauss says, "These are sheep" in Quixote. We may even find these pages something to be born until the real genius and beauty return in "the works of peace and science" or in sketches of the fair Dulcinea.

Cecil Smith, now editor of Musical America, once wrote in the Chicago Tribune that he considered the closing pages of Don Quixote worth all the music of Sibelius, Rachmaninoff, and Glazounow combined. For touching simplicity, stated in absolute economy, he is probably right.

The National Symphany Orchestra will give its first performance of Don Quixote during the coming season. Though the late Hans Kindler often played the virtuoso cello part assigned to the Don, he never conducted the work with his orchestra.

Operatic Masterpieces

IN OPERA, Strauss created three unique masterpieces. Salome, on Oscar Wilde's text, is a one-act music drama of high urgency. Wilde's poetry is intensified by the way the music surges through the longing of Narraboth, the manner in which Herod and Herodias comment on the scene, and the way the young Salome abandons herself utterly to a mad passion, first for the body, and later, for the decapitated head of John the Baptist.

Throughout the opera, the music rises with the action to the searing closing scene when Herod commands the death of the young princess.

Less single-minded than Salome, Elektra is not less successful in creating an atmosphere of horror. But where Strauss's inclination to write beautiful melodies fitted into the plan for Salome, it often seems to interrupt the mood of Elektra. The work is most appropriate in its more dramatic moments. Nothing Strauss ever did exceeds the mighty scene in which Elektra recognizes the returning Orestes.

Singer of Songs

TURNING from the tone poems and operas to the other field in which Strauss was equally master, we come to the songs. Among the 145 songs (compared to Schubert's more than 600 and the 300 odd of Hugo Wolf) are some of the world's masterworks.

Eight Strauss Lieder stand on singers' programs often enough to be counted permanent classics: Zueignung, Allerseelen, Standchen, Ruhe meine Seele, Caecilie, Morgan, Traum durch die Daemmerung, and Befreit. With the possible exception of Caecilie, these deserve that place.

There are also 10 or a dozen equally as beautiful. But singers are lazy and one does not as often hear such gems as Geduld, Brein ueber mein Haupt, Nachtgang, the Song of the Blind, and the Three Holy Kings.

Likes the Competition in America

Britain's Top Jazz Pianist Is Happy Tho Blind

NEW YORK, Sept. 17 (AP)—Music fans who have heard George Shearing know that he came here as England's No. 1 jazz pianist.

They probably don't know he is blind. Shearing won't let that be announced at performances. He wears sun glasses to hide it when he leads is band.

Shearing, blind since babyhood, says he wants "no advantage outside my music." He intends to stay here where jazz competition and criticism are sharpest. He likes that.

At the age of 29 after two years here, the blind boy who insisted on earning his way at 16, now is rated among the "top six" jazz piano players of America. He still is climbing. Critics harp on his originality of conception. One of the things he does is now known to the initiate as "single-finger and locked-hands bop."

Shearing likes the fact that so many people here know what that means, yet this easy-going but stubborn blond Englishman isn't satisfied with bringing down the house with his rapt playing of moderate "bebop."

Performing in New York's various "progressive jazz" meccas, Shearing always insists on playing some classical composers like Chopin or Debussy for the jazz addicts because he thinks they should have a "varied program of music."

No Operation

IN the privacy of his own Staten Island home, Shearing prefers the works of sophisticated modern classicists like Bartok and Hindemith.

Shearing, who always talks of his "seeing" the people he meets and the places he visits, says he "would refuse point blank" any operation to restore his sight.

He is "leading a very happy life" in the world of sound and touch he has known since early childhood. "If I had it back, he says, "I wonder if I wouldn't have to learn everything all over again."

Besides his music, his "very happy life" includes his wife, Trixie, whom he met in a London air raid shelter, and their daughter Wendy Ann. Long before Shearing had reached Wendy's present age of 6, he was drawn to the piano in his home at Battersea, London, although his family was not musically inclined.

The sightless boy first practiced on the piano with a hammer. At the age of 5 he had taught himself to play tunes by ear. Then he was sent to music school for the blind. At 16 he turned down an opportunity to continue through college because "I didn't want to wait until I was 21 to earn a living."

A Pub-Player

SHEARING'S first job was playing the piano in a pub. Every night after it closed he would go on to play in a struggling semipro band. When his employer objected, he quit his paying job.

Then he toured England with an all-blind band and his fame grew until he had a regular band of his own. In 1940 he was leading it at London's St. Regisal Hotel when it was closed down abruptly by a German time bomb.

Not knowing whether he would be blown to bits the next instant, Shearing groped his way into the building next morning to save their music and instruments.

GEORGE SHEARING CAME HERE FROM ENGLAND TWO YEARS AGO
. . . he intends to stay here, where jazz competition and criticism are sharpest

In 1941 he was in an air raid shelter playing a piano to calm people's nerves. That was where he was first heard by Miss Trixie Bayes. They were married eight months later.

Shearing had worked his way up to head a 24-piece recording band and also to top the swing pianists in the Melody Maker Poll, British equivalent of the Down Beat Poll here. He headed the list for seven years thereafter, with one exception. That was the year he came to America on a holiday and liked the atmosphere so much he decided to come again to work.

Shearing returned to England to put himself and his family on the United States immigration list. He sold his home, his car and his cherished Austrian Bosendorfer grand piano which had represented one of the great ambitions of his life.

Gradually he gained more notice here, with appearances and recordings. This year his small band has made the top "progressive jazz" showplaces in New York—The Royal Roost, cafe society and bop city—plus getting a contract with a top recording company and a dozen coast-to-coast broadcasts.

A Teetotaler

HE goes around without a cane, mostly with the aid of Trixie or friends—he wouldn't dream of a seeing-eye dog—types by the touch system, reads and writes Braille, and shaves himself. He never touchs liquor or tobacco.

Now Sharing, who has appeared mostly in the East, would like to get the feel of other parts of America especially the Pacific States.

"I want to see the West Coast," he says. "I've heard so much about the life and climate there."

Opera Writer Is Friend of Working Man

By The Associated Press

OF ALL the composers, the man who writes opera has shown perhaps the greatest interest in the workingman. Often workers, their wives and friends are used to pack the chorus, and on occasion the worker, filling a lead role and singing the important arias, really does the work.

There are frequent groups of peasants, villagers, servants and soldiers. Marguerite spins, Mimi makes artificial flowers, Hans Sachs is a cobbler, Carmen is a cigarette girl and Parpignol sells toys. In various works you find the barber, nurse, innkeeper, teamster, muleteer, boatman, farmer, broom-maker, shepherd, cook, baker, grocer, fisherman, dairymaid and even the cowboy and miner.

Rossini's Figaro, "The Barber of Seville," sings of his merry work with razor, comb anad scissors in "Largo al Factotum," of which there are recordings by Lawrence Tibbett, John Charles Thomas and Leonard Warren. Lucrezia Bori, Lucia Albanese, Bidu Sayao and Grace Moore have recorded Mimi's song about her work, "Mi Chiamano Mimi," from Puccini's "La Boheme." Friedrich Schorr and Nelson Eddy, among others, are on records in Hans Sachs' cobbler's song.

This Is 10th Year For Dance Studio

TEN years of teaching Washingtonians how to trip the light fantastic are being celebrated this month by the Arthur Murray Dance Studios, 1106 Connecticut ave. nw. Mrs. Ethel Fistere, owner and director, received her franchise from Arthur Murray just a decade ago, although she has been associated with the dancing studio for 21 years.

Also celebrating a tenth anniversary is the studio manager, Nils Brent, who was a teacher at the Arthur Murray studios when Mrs. Fistere took over the franchise.

Staff members, students and guests will celebrate the anniversary today during one of the regular bimonthly dances at the Wardman Park Hotel.

The Record Player

Britten Opera, Flagstad Truly Great

BRITTEN: The Rape of Lucretia—nearly complete opera. Peter Pears, Joan Cross, soloists, and orchestra under Britten. 8-HMV 12-inch disks.

This is Britten's chamber opera, written between Peter Grimes and Albert Herring.

Its dimensions are numerically small requiring 8 singers and only 13 instrumental players. The breadth of writing for both voices and instruments seems to stretch into the realm of the symphonic-opera world.

Britten's text is taken from the ancient story of the Roman matron, Lucretia, faithful wife of Collatinus, whose fidelity was destroyed by the early Roman tyrant, Tarquinius. Lucretia told her returning husband the news and then killed herself, "so that other Roman matrons might not use the name Lucretia to excuse themselves."

Around this personal and social tragedy, Britten has woven a miraculous web of sound. The delicacy of the orchestration is unique. The use of harp and piano together with strings and woodwinds makes possible a range of sonorities shading from a whisper of solo harp to the full strength of what seems to be a large orchestra.

The voices often speak in concert, particularly the women, who have a remarkable scene as they weave together in Lucretia's room. The Greek chorus is sung by a man and woman in place of the groups of voices generally employed. For straightforward excitement, the music surrounding Tarquinius' late night ride to the house of Lucretia is true genius. It is amazing also to hear singing of as high virtuosity as the instrumental playing.

Peter Pears as the male chorus, Joan Cross as Lucretia, and the baritone who sings Tarquinius are superb in their parts, but so is every voice in the set. This is one of the finest recordings of any music I have heard and some of the most interesting and beautiful sound.

WAGNER: Immolation Scene. Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, with London Philharmonic under Wilhelm Furtwangler. 3 HMV 12-inch disks, five sides.

I am tempted sorely to describe this as the greatest recording I have ever heard.

No voice on earth today can compare with that of Flagstad in this soaring music. This set was recently made in London, with all the engineering genius of England's finest technicians to make it immortal.

Flagstad's voice is captured here as never before. It sounds more beautiful and brilliant than my memory recalls hearing it. With her is Furtwangler leading one of the world's great orchestras in music he understands to the last rest.

Comparisons are necessary: Flagstad made this scene with McArthur and the San Francisco Symphony some years ago. That orchestra cannot compare with the London players and the recording was not as fine in balance or in general tone, nor did the voice come out as well. And McArthur rushed the great moments where Furtwangler holds them back.

One of the notable characteristics of Flagstad's singing of Wagner has always been her art in broadening the mighty moments where others have to rush them to get through. Frankly this set makes the Toscanini-Traubel version sound like students still learning the music. That may be heresy to some. It is true nevertheless. Take your score and watch which of the conductors follows Wagner's markings more closely.

Then check singers and see who rides notes and the deep inner meaning of the words most artistically. This set is one of the immense experiences in the world of music.

DOWLAND: "Shall I Sue?" "Now Cease My Wandering Eyes"; "Flow My Tears." Aksel Schiotz, tenor, with Jvette Schmidt, guitar. Victor 45 r.p.m. 49-9406. 95 cents.

Wait for this record until you can get it on Victor 78 r.p.m. and then get it at once. It contains some of the finest singing you can hear today.

The sound of the English language sung this beautifully (and by a Danish-born artist), should make most American singers blush. The music is tender, gentle and clear as crystal. The guitar is an acceptable substitute for the ancient lute intended.

Mozart: Concerto for flute and harp. Lily Laskine, harp; Rene Le Roy, flute, with Royal Philharmonic Orchestra under Beecham. Victor 1292. $4.75.

I find it pleasant but entirely routine—not routine Mozart that is a high level of excellence. Routine writing in the period, not filled with those graces of melody and surprising twists of harmony and form which mark the best Mozart.

The performance is perfection, if you accept Le Roy's kind of flute tone as desirable. I prefer something a little more direct. Beecham and Miss Laskine do their work wonderfully.—P. H.

New Albums Puts 'Pops' Works on Wax

HERE'S a program which, since it is semiclassical, or even demisemiclassical, probably ought to be ranked as pops:

Pocket-size RCA Victor 45s include an album of 10 "Dances Not for Dancing," played by the First Piano Quartet; Respighi's "The Pines of Rome" with Goossens and the Cincinnati Symphony; and Robert Merrill, with Leila Edwards at the piano, singing "Mah Lindy Lou" and "The Green-Eyed Dragon."

On one side of a long-playing Columbia disk, Rise Stevens uses her Metropolitan-opera voice for eight old favorites under the general title of "Sincerely Yours." On the other side she sings eight love songs: "Dearly Beloved," "Lover, Come Back to Me," "The Man I Love," Love Walked In," "Falling in Love With Love," "I Love You," "I'm Falling in Love With Someone" and "Lover" . . . which is a lot of love. Sylvan Shulman conducts the accompanying orchestra.

Lecuona's "Andalucia," "La Comparsa," "Malaguena" and "Jungle Drums" are recorded in a Columbia album of small 78s with Morton Gould conducting the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra. There is also a long-playing version of Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" in a sort of grade school adaptation by Ralph Rose: Basil Rathbone, Jane Powell and Ted Donaldson are the principal voices, and supporting cast and orchestra are conducted by Carmen Dragon.

Christopher Lynch, with Eugene Bossart at the piano, sings "Blow Me Eyes" and "My Pagan Love" on a Columiba seven-incher. Intermezzi from "Manon Lescaut," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "The Jewels of the Madonna," and "Sebastian," Menotti's ballet suite, are played by Mitropoulos and the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra, again on a Columbia long-playing 10-inch. And same size, same source, Kostelanetz and his orchestra offer transcriptions of eight Chopin piano pieces.

Stokowski to Do Mahler Symphony

Leopold Stokowski plans the first performances by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony of the monumental Mahler Symphony No. 8 during Easter week, 1950.

Stokowski will use two choruses, as large as the stage will permit, of picked voices, one drawn from the Westminster Choir, the other from the Schola Cantorum, as well as a boys' chorus. After a series of auditions, he has chosen the eight soloists who will assist the orchestra and choruses. The soloists will be Frances Yeend, soprano; Uta Graf, soprano; Camilla Williams, soprano; Louise Bernhardt, contralto Eugene Conley, tenor; George London, barytone, and Carlos Alexander, bass-barytone.—(U. Olsen and Johnson Via TV

Git to the Cellar; Twister's Here

RELATIVELY CALM, for a split second, are Ole Olsen (left), Chic Johnson and the NBC TV camera. Thursday night at 9 on WNBW, they'll be cutting loose on their "Fireball—Fun for All" show with the help of midgets, cannons, dead birds, buckets of water, seltzer bottles, muskets and stilt walkers

OLSEN AND JOHNSON, fresh from a theatrical tour in Canada, begin a series of video shows over the NBC television network starting Thursday, September 22 (9 p. m., WNBW).

Their program, "Fireball Fun-for-All," was last seen in a seven-week stint in the time-spot vacated by Milton Berle. Chic and Ole hit top Hooper rating within a month after their first "Fireball Fun-for-All" show and then left for a 14-day engagement at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto.

They were returning to Canada by popular demand, their 1948 presentation having grossed $360,000. Arriving in Toronto this year, they found that the show had already been sold out days in advance, and the ticket chaos was such that the sponsors of the show had to take ads in the local papers, explaining why there were no pasteboards available.

Faced with a $400,000 gross before they even opened, the comics set about, happily preparing their "Grandstand Gayeties," which incorporated some of the acts they had used in their Madison Square Garden show, plus new talent, plus 96 girls and 48 men for precision, ballet and choral production numbers. The former turned out to be eye-filling and gorgeously costumed and had the huge crowds—including Americans who had bought $70,000 worth of tickets—roaring their approval.

Olsen and Johnson are expected to have on hand their usual props: Lots of guns—loaded; seltzer bottles and other "moistening" equipment, trainloads of stooges, trapdoors and midgets.

'Voice' Rates Music Our Best Spokesman

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, Sept. 17 (AP).—Radio listeners who like their music without commercials would delight in the Voice of America broadcasts beamed overseas.

The voice programs include the best of the musical programs heard in this country—with the commercials removed. Good music is regarded by Voice of America officials as one of the best spokesmen for this country.

Walter Ducloux, Swiss-born conductor and one of the music consultants of the voice, explains that sponsors gladly furnish their programs, with sales messages removed, to be used to carry this country's message to the world.

But decommercialized network programs form only a part of the musical fare sent out by the Voice of America. Independent stations furnish the best of their programs. Special events teams from the voice also go around the country to make recordings of concerts that are not broadcast.

Ducloux says many foreign-born artists who are now citizens of this country come into the voice studios and give recorded interviews in their native tongues to be beamed to their homelands.

Covers Wide Range

AN ENTIRE program may not be sent out as heard in this country. Instead, a broadcast to Spain, for instance, may include Spanish numbers from several different domestic broadcasts so listeners there can hear how music of their country is performed in the United States.

The music beamed overseas covers a wide range from heavy classical to standard popular American numbers and folk music, such as Burl Ives ballad numbers. But be-bop is omitted, lest foreign propagandists point to it as an example of "decadence of American music."

Ducloux, with United States Army Intelligence during the war, has conducted some of the leading American orchestras. He was guest conductor of the NBC Symphony September 10 and will wield the baton again for the September 24 broadcast.

ACTOR PHILIP REED finds television viewers much more inclined to forgive mistakes than moviegoers. That, he says, is all to the good because he considers television more difficult than the stage, films or radio—and he has appeared in all four.

Reed, now co-starring with Ruth Gilbert in "Ruthie on the Telephone," six nights a week on the Columbia Broadcasting System video network, explains it this way:

"Television set owners now feel they are pioneers—that they are fellow members of a sort of club. They are much more tolerant of an occasional slip than when they buy a ticket and see a movie. Then they demand perfection."

The television actor, Reed continues, has to learn a complete script and play a performance straight through. There can be no piecemeal memorizing and acting, as in the films, and no retakes when something goes wrong. There are no prompters as on the stage, and no audience reaction to guide you. And, of course, you can't keep your script in front of you to read, as in radio.

The 6-foot-2, curly-haired actor says television has quite a way to go before it achieves the technical standards of the movies, but that its progress has been amazing.

Reed also foresees no damaging effects on the movies from television.

"It will develop new appreciation for plays and movies and eventually will aid rather than hinder other forms of entertainment," he declares.

MORE radio programs shifts are coming up on NBC. "Sam Spade" switches from CBS to NBC a week from tomorrow. NBC's "Cities Service Band of America" changes from Friday nights to Monday nights September 26. In television, "The Original Amateur Hour" changes from Dumont to NBC October 4. Two of NBC television's top shows also return—Milton Berle's "Star Theater" next Tuesday and Olsen and Johnson next Thursday.

PAUL WINCHELL will play the role of a mad ventriloquist in "Lights Out" on NBC television next Thursday, but his dummy, Jerry Mahoney, won't be in the act. A special one is being made for the occasion. Winchell doesn't want Jerry to be identified with a villainous role. Winchell's regular television show will be on CBS this season, resuming October 5.

Harriet and Ozzie Shift

A MILLION DOLLARS is estimated by ABC to be involved in the long-term contract just signed with Ozzie and Harriet which will move their family comedy to that network from CBS. The new series, with little change in format, is expected to start in early October. The contract also calls for television later on.

It will be the third transfer for the show within a year. Last fall, the sponsor shifted to NBC, returning to CBS in the spring. Then at the end of this year's schedule, he dropped the time altogether, indicating his intention of turning to television in the future.

Berg Family Drops 'Gold' When Off Air

where we asked a native where the Bergs live.

"Bergs? Must be new up here. Never heard of them."

But they've lived here for years, we explained. You know the lady who plays the part of Mrs. Goldberg on the radio and television.

"OH, SURE! Why didn't you say the GOLD-bergs! Everybody knows where they live. Right up the road there in the big house on the right."

In a gleaming colonial mansion, parts of it 200 years old, neatly crowded with antiques, we found the Bergs—husband Lewis Berg, able and prosperous chemical engineer; daughter Harriet, graduate of Wisconsin and Barnard, now sweating out the writing game, and Mrs. Berg, called Tillie by her husband. A tour of the house wound up in the grandest guest room of all, which Mr. Berg explained in a sly whisper: "Tillie calls this the Sponsor's Room."

And there was a time, just a year ago, when her young agent, Ted Ashley, needed far more than a fancy guest room as bait to sell aloof sponsors on the work of Tillie-Mollie-Gertrude Berg. Ashley tried to sell her for television. Network and advertising agency experts handed down the verdict: "The Goldbergs have been dead for five years. They wore themselves out on radio." That was before CBS gambled and Gertrude Berg payed off. Television did for the Goldbergs what it did for Milton Berle, and will do for Ed Wynn this winter.

You can hear The Goldbergs at 8 p. m. every Friday over WTOP.

The team of Tillie and Lewis Berg makes as warm a story as any you'll see on the Goldbergs; she is curious about everything, but especially about his work: "Mrs. Berg always makes me explain the drawings of my machines. And for her, I always type the scripts. Why do I do it? Well, I am the only one who can read her handwriting."

They've been in love a long time; they met when he was 20 and she was 14, and Mr. Berg can remember very clearly that "she has been writing since she was a little girl. Only on our honeymoon did she stop writing, and even then, I could tell that she was thinking up ideas."

Like Mr. Berg, both Harriet and her musical brother worship their mother; but there have been moments of anguish: "My brother, Cherne, and I used to have fights when we were kids, and then next day, we'd hear the whole argument on the Goldbergs' program.

The Goldbergs were born by sheer chance in Louisiana, where there are dozens of accents from Cajun-French to molasses-Southern. In that atmosphere, Mrs. Berg wrote Mollie's monologues. A friend saw them and sent them to a radio station, where they made nobody laugh—until Mrs. Berg showed up to read them. And that's how America's most famous Bronx accent happened to be born in the bayou country.

TEX

From her engineering husband, Mrs. Berg has learned one important lesson: "The best time to memorize is at 6 in the morning. That's when I learn my television scripts. Mr. Berg works with me and gives the cues. All our life, we worked together—in the first year we were married, we read 'War and Peace' out loud, together. Next year, we started reading all the plays of George Bernard Shaw; Mr. Berg would be the men and I would be the women."

We asked her if Mr. Goldberg, Jake, is really Mr. Berg. She thought a minute and then answered: "Jake is all the good men I ever knew. There is a Jake in every family album."

Pulse, Inc. Rates as Super-Hooper

There are one or two tricky situations brought about by the Pulse method. Like most of the elaborate survey systems, it professes to use a cross section of the inhabitants of the area. By telephone, Pulse points out, the interviewer cannot get information about the "respondent." But the door-to-door Pulse representative can "from her own observation" judge the "age, socioeconomic status, education and nationality" of the victim.

Antisocioeconomic

I'LL THANK the Pulse representative not to pound on my door in the morning and proceed to judge my age and socioeconomic status before I get my lipstick on and my new window drapes up.

(Actually, such matters are of vital concern to the sponsor who is of A No. 1 concern to the station. He wants to know if his program appeals to the kind of people who are apt to buy his product. Pulse, like other surveys, uses official census reports to figure out what would be a cross-section of the population in matters of age, salary, education, home and car ownership, etc.)

Pulse interviewers, who make inquiries about the 8 a. m. to 12 noon programs during the noon to 1 p. m. period, are apt to joggle the memory of the "respondent" with such pertinent questions as: "When did the family awake?" "When did you start your housecleaning?" "What household chores did you do this morning?" "Did your children come home for lunch?"

These, if they don't bring forth a savage snarl, presumably remind the housewife that she listened to Nancy Osgood while she shredded her carrots, to Arthur Godfrey while she cleaned the bubble gum off the baby's shoes, and to the sorrows of Helen Trent while she peeled onions for lunch.

Comparable questions are asked from 4 to 5 p. m. to assist "respondents" who are queried about the programs heard from noon to 4 p. m. During the 7 to 8 p. m. interview period, queries are made about programs heard from 4 p. m. to 7 p. m. and in the morning from 6 to 8 a. m. since the office worker is then home from his labors.

Shows heard from 7 p. m. to midnight are tabulated in interviews made between 5:30 and 7 p. m. the following evening.

You Must Play Fair

THE "aided recall roster method" used means only that the Pulse interviewer aids you in recalling which programs you listened to, by showing you a roster or list of all the radio programs available in this area for each quarter of an hour about which you are being questioned. (Since this means 14 programs during many hours of the day—although FM-only stations are not included—you can see Pulse goes to some trouble.)

The moral of it all is, don't let the Pulse representative in unless you're willing to play his little game without cheating about what shows you listened to, or on which socioeconomic level you belong. You can't imagine what you'll do to the ratings!

If you're worried about the identity of anyone who presents himself as a Pulse representative, ask to see his little blue identification card. And ask for a Better Business Bureau credential, too, if you're really in doubt. (Many of the interviewers are Washington housewives, and not very formidable.)

These data are collected for a whole week once a month—usually the first week of the month—and then two months are averaged for the bimonthly report.

It's Sharpshooting

AS you can see, there is room for error in this survey, but on the whole it probably comes close, and even if you discount some of what it says you might be willing to accept such findings as Pulse shows to be handsdown conclusions. In the first D. C. report, for example, it found that WTOP led in listeners for one out of every two quarter-hour periods every day! The next station led the field in only one out of every five quarter-hour periods. Nibble off a little for probable error, and you've still got an impressive figure.

The other standout situation shown by the first report was the overwhelming interest in baseball on the air. It leads the field.

The Washington Philatelist

No New Stamps, But How About Some Envelopes?

By William M. Stuart

WHILE postal officials seem to agree there will be no revision of the current series of stamps, it is generally conceded that a new issue of envelopes is badly needed. Some years ago an elaborate issue of new envelopes was outlined, postal officials even selecting first day cities for various new values. However, for some unknown reason the whole thing was called off and the public has been compelled to use old envelopes. It is now essential that a new envelope series be issued and action is looked for shortly.

STUART

The envelopes now in use are manufactured by a corporation in Dayton, Ohio, under Government supervision. While these envelopes are printed under contract, there is nothing to prevent the Postoffice Department from issuing new envelopes when necessary. As the postage stamp program for the year is complete, perhaps it would be an opportune time for a new envelope series to be issued. No doubt collectors would welcome new envelopes of an entirely new design for all values.

COMMANDER IN CHIEF JAMES W. MOORE of the United States Confederate Veterans has advised Postmaster General Donaldson that the reunion of the United Confederate Veterans at Little Rock, Ark., September 27-29 will not be the final reunion. He had previously advised the department that this year's reunion would be the final one. The commander asked the department that the issuance of a commemorative stamp we withheld until the final reunion, which he says may be held next year. In view of this the 3-cent commemorative stamp announced for September 29 will not be issued.

THE Postoffice Department has announced that in August, 1949, the following new postoffices were authorized to sell precanceled stamps: Riverside, Conn.; Nassau, Del.; Boynton and Clarcona, Fla.; Highland, Md.; Teaticket, Mass.; Bonnets Mills, Mo.; San Juan Peblo and Zuni, N. Mex.; Avoca, N. Y.; Lattimore, N. C.; Raub, N. Dak.; Lithopolis, Ohio; Alpine, Tenn.; Crane, Tex.; Bluemont, Va., and Hamlin, W. Va.

The Department announces that parcel post service to the American, British and French sectors of Berlin has been extended to permit the mailing of commercials at the postage rate of 14 cents per pound.

An August 25, first day sale of the 6-cent air mail coil, 240,386 covers were canceled and 996,813 stamps sold, valued at $59,808.78.

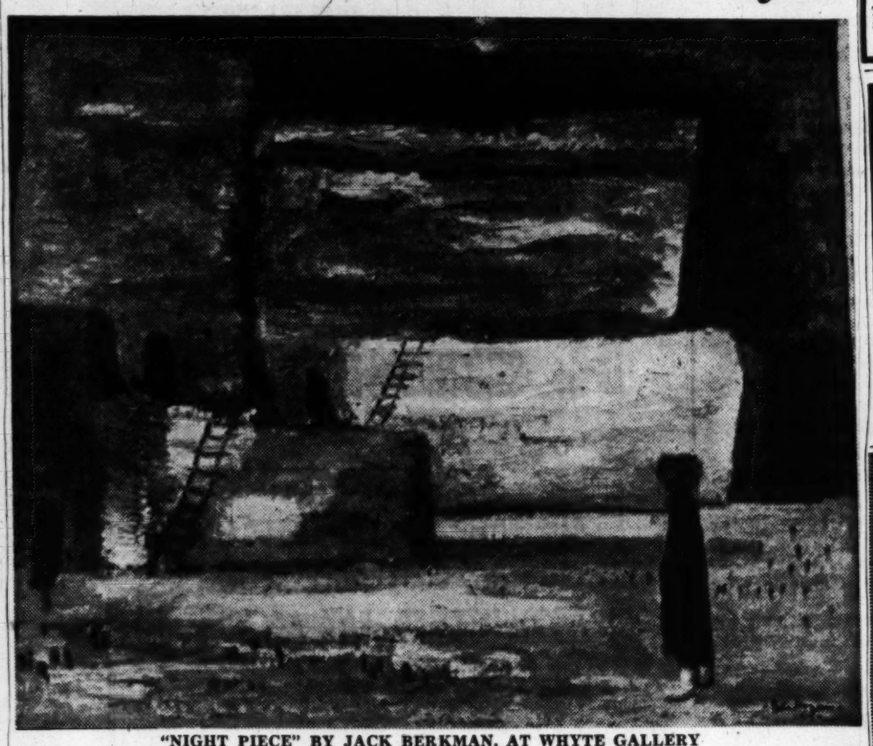
THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A. held a regular meeting on Tuesday and will meet again Tuesday in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw., at 8 p. m.

Air mail service has ben inaugurated over segment No. 4 of route AM-81, between Dallas, Fort Worth and Gainesville, Tex.; Ardmore, Ada, Holdenville, Shawnee and Oklahoma City, Okla. Special cachets were provided but no provision was made for point-to-point service.

C. R. Chickering was the designer of the 3-cent Grand Army of the Republic commemorative stamp, issued in Indianapolis, Ind. C. A. Brooks engraved the vignette, and the outline frame, lettering and numerals were engraved by A. W. Christensen.

New Mexico Canvases Different

The West Alters Berkman Style



"NIGHT PIECE" BY JACK BERKMAN, AT WHYTE GALLERY
. . . one product of his sojourn in New Mexico

By Jane Watson Crane

JACK BERKMAN is back in Washington from New Mexico with a stack of new canvases of his own and a portfolio of childrens' drawings for his classes at the Harwood Foundation in Taos.

Imagine a class of 80 chldren from the ages of 3 to 14 of Indian, Mexican, Anglo-Saxon and Spanish descent. Even the enthusiastic Berkman admits that it was a bit too many. But he found them so eager to learn that disciplinary problems were minor.

He read or related Indian legends to them, or invited interpretation of an everyday experience, encouraging the play of fancy and the free selection of colors. He found the Mexican children most imaginative and enterprising; the work of the Indians a curious combination of the traditional and the original. And above all he was interested to find the work of these children of the West so different from those of the East.

The Harwood Gallery in Taos, established by the Harwood Foundation, is the property of the University of New Mexico. It includes studio apartments, a library, an art gallery and a permanent collection, and serves as headquarters for the Taos Artists Association. The class taught by Berkman was offered by the foundation free to the children of the region. To say that he found it worthwhile is an understatement.

Artistic Neighbors

BERKMAN left Washington about a year ago to take up some special studies at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque. Later, with his wife, he moved to Taos and finally to Talpa, a small Mexican-Indian village in the vicinity.

The paintings at the Whyte Gallery are all the product of the New Mexico sojourn and differ in respect to color and handling from earlier work done here in Washington. Berkman makes no claim to having apprehended or captured on canvas the spacious wonder of New Mexico within the short space of a year. But as a painter he found the landscape enormously interesting and particularly applicable to the problems relating to planes and the projection of areas in space on which he is intent.

He found not only the country a challenge, but the neighbors, too. They included the artists Andrew Dasburg, Ward Lockwood and Howard Cook, who have been exploring similar problems by way of this New Mexican landscape for years.

Berkman's concern with organization in his painting is evident throughout the show. He spoke of the current stress on design, remarking that color arrangement without design falls to pieces, no matter how ingenious the experimentation. Berkman's own colorful studies are based on order and are closely integrated. The paintings are personal expressions, in which the artist has made use of the elements of his environment to suit his own purposes.

Interest Everywhere

BERKMAN spoke of efforts in Taos to establish a community arts council, relating the arts to one another, the type of thing which "might lead to the exchange of culture festivals throughout the country." His Western trek leads him to believe that there "isn't an isolated hamlet in the United States today where you could not find individuals or a group with interest in and knowledge of modern art."

Among the artists—and Taos aboounds in artists—he found a reawakened interest in the works of the early Renaissance—Giotto particularly. Broadening the theme from this one example, he remarked that the soundest of the artists were anxious (as they always have been) to recapture the universal elements in art that have held good in all ages.

Speaking of the need for closer integration among the arts, he thought that increasing awareness of relationships would help persons who failed to realize their goals in one medium to find them in another, and cited particularly an easel painter who turned to costume design.

During his stay in New Mexico, Berkman had two shows in Santa Fe at the museum and one in a Taos gallery. It was his first visit to the region, which captured his interest in the first place not only because of the landscape but because of the human situation created by the intermingling of various nationalities and racial strains.

GI Bill Spent Billions To Educate Millions

UNCLE SAM has spent more than seven billion dollars educating veterans during the first five years of operation of the famous "GI Bill of Rights."

That is twice the cost of the bill's unemployment and self-employment provisions, for which taxpayers have been billed $3,571,000,000.

Home, farm and business loans, the third major item in the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, as the GI bill is properly known, have been underwritten by the Government to the tune of $4,147,000,000.

Defaulted loans and automatic cash payments covering part of the first year's interest on each loan have so far cost only 177 million dollars, but could conceivably run into billions too before the loan is paid off.

A fourth section of the bill has resulted in transfer to the Veterans Administration (VA) of about 40 Army and Navy surplus hospitals with a capacity of about 39,000 beds.

Under a fifth section thousands of veterans have had other-than-honorable discharges changed to a better variety.

Let's have a look at the principle features of the GI bill, undoubtedly the most outstanding veterans' legislation ever passed.

1. Education: Dr. Francis J. Brown, staff associate of the American Council on Education and formerly executive secretary of the President's Commission on Higher Education, says: "What the GI bill has done and is doing to educate the young men of this country is unprecedented in the history of scholarship education. It's full significance won't be realized for years."

During its first two years of operation the bill was the main factor in jumping college enrollment from 800,000 to 2,500,000, or 70 per cent higher than the pre-war peak.

Veterans get up to four calendar years of almost any type of education or training they want. A 1948 amendment to the bill cuts out certain courses, such as flying, dancing and drink-mixing, unless the veteran can show they will help him earn his living. Aside from that restriction, and the fact that all training institutions must be approved by a State education agency, the door is open to any manner, shape or form of education or training.

More than six million out of about 15 million eligibles have used up some of their education rights. However, only 85,659 have exhausted their entire benefit.

VA officials say the peak of college training has passed. They believe the same is true of on-the-job training. But enrollment in precollege schools is going up.

Institutional on-farm training is also increasing, but officials say the reason here is that some States are just now getting their training programs into top-notch shape.

These programs are operated by county agricultural groups coordinated by a State committee. Farmer veterans must either own or operate a farm to be eligible. They must spend at least 200 hours a year in the classroom and 100 hours under supervised instruction on the farm.

2. Unemployment pay: The $3,571,000,000 it has cost to operate the bill's readjustment allowance section is split in two parts. Three billion dollars has gone to unemployed veterans at the rate of $20 a week for a maximum of 52 weeks. The balance has gone to self-employed veterans who failed to make a net profit of $100 in any one month.

Only 1,150,000 veterans have exhausted all their allowance payments. The program ended in July.

But 8,618,570 veterans have cashed at least one weekly or monthly check. In the peak year, 1946, some $1,743,000,000 was paid out.

3. Loans. The loan section of the bill provides Government guarantees on private loans obtained by veterans for buying or building a house or buying or starting a business or a farm. Approved loans carry a 50 per cent guarantee, up to a maximum guarantee of $4000 on all real estate loans and $2000 on nonreal-estate loans. There is no limit to the amount which can be borrowed.

So far 1,458,000 have borrowed $8,200,000,000 for home loans; 107,000 have borrowed $336,000,000 to acquire businesses; 51,087 have borrowed $197,000,000 to get farms.

Only six tenths per cent of all loans made have resulted in claims against the Government because of defaults by veterans. Claims amount to $11,215,880, much of which VA says it will be able to recover.

4. Appeal of discharge. When it wrote the bill in the spring of 1945, Congress foresaw that the hurly-burly of sudden demobilization might result in some veterans getting bum deals on their discharges. So it included a section which set up special discharge review boards to be appointed by the service Secretaries with the sole job of reviewing other-than-honorable discharges.

The veteran is guaranteed a personal hearing before the board to plead a change of discharge. So far appeals of 13,045 have been successful.

The GI bill has no single cut-off date. Almost all education will end July 25, 1956. Almost all loans will have been made by July 25, 1957. The unemployment allowance provision ended for almost all veterans on July 25. The chance to appeal a discharge expires June 22, 1959, or 15 years after discharge, whichever is later.

Mass Teaching by TV Object of Naval Study

By Rowland Evans, Jr.

A MASS-EDUCATION television technique now in use by the Navy may some day bring top-flight college professors into your home.

The office of Naval Research says its televised lessons are still in the "experimental stage," although the first lesson was given nine months ago after more than a year of preparation.

Fifty second-classmen at the Kings Point, Long Island, Merchant Marine Academy guinea-pigged the program from last January to June. They got their naval ROTC instruction from two 20-inch television screens in their classrooms. The broadcasts originated from the Navy's special devices center at nearby Sands Point, Long Island.

In July the Navy expanded the field and started televising lessons to hundreds of naval air reserves at naval air stations in Washington and Philadelphia and on Long Island.

These broadcasts are beamed from the Sands Point studio to NBC's main New York City transmission point, whence they travel by coaxial cable to local commercial outlets. Two-way communication allows question and answer periods.

NBC loaned its transmission lines to the Navy for the summer lessons. Lesson time is early Saturday and Sunday mornings, when NBC has no shows of its own.

Close This Week

A 38-YEAR-OLD graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology is most responsible for putting the Navy into the business of teaching by television. He is E. A. Hungerford, Navy veteran and self-described "dreamer," all of whose 14 working years have been spent in radar or television. Before he joined the Navy, Hungerford was an NBC television expert.

His dreams envision education by television on a broad scale. He sees the possibility of getting first-rate teaching talent into the American home by use of television.

The summer lessons to air reservists close this weekend. At the start of the fall semester those sent to the Merchant Marine Academy will begin again.

More Evidence

MEANWHILE a mass of evidence on the worth or waste of teaching by television is being gathered by Dr. Robert Rock, professor of psychology at Fordham University.

Dr. Rock and nine assistants devise tests which they give before and after each lesson to three "control groups" of students to find out the value of televised lessons. The groups are:

1. Those who get their learning from local instructors, following the lesson plan prepared at Sands Point.

2. Those who get face to face instruction from the same instructor who gives the television lesson. After every televised lesson the instructor takes his props and delivers the identical lesson in person to a group of students who have not had the lesson by television.

3. Those who get kinescopic recordings of the televised lesson. A kinescopic recording duplicates both the sound and sight of television.

By comparing what each of these three groups retains with what is retained by students taught by television, Dr. Rock hopes to determine precisely what can be accomplished by TV teaching.

Results of his study so far have not yet been announced.

Two Advantages

HUNGERFORD points to two advantages of teaching by television rather than by on-the-spot instructors or by films.

1. Good instructors are hard to get and need a lot of training themselves. By hooking together a number of scattered classrooms by means of TV, hundreds or even thousands of students can get simultaneous instruction from the best teacher available. And the instructor, teaching from one central point, can assemble all the equipment he needs to make his lesson graphic.

2. It taks months to prepare an instructional film and weeks to deliver it. Often by the time it is ready part of it is out of date.

As Hungerford puts it, suppose the Navy came up with a radical new firefighting device. By means of TV whole crews on hundreds of Navy ships could learn how to work it overnight. Hungerford says that in time of war this time element might make the difference between winning or losing a battle.

During the summer lessons to reservists the Navy has used the best man available to deliver each broadcast. The instructor is flown to Sands Point to work out the "show" with Navy technicians, gather his "props" (often the latest equipment available) and rehearse. Average rehearsal time has been about eight hours.

Both the Army and Air Force have had officers on duty at Sands Point assisting in production and keeping their chiefs in Washington informed.

The Army is thinking of using the new technique this winter, but it has made no official announcement as to where its lessons might go or when they might start.

Md. Teachers to Hold Convention in Baltimore

NEARLY 10,000 teachers will attend the eighty-second annual convention of the Maryland State Teachers Association on October 20, 21 and 22 in the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore. "The Stuff Education Is Made Of," adapted from a quotation of Benjamin Franklin, is the theme of the convention.

At the first general session, Dr. John K. Norton will speak on "Keeping American Education Free." He will discuss communism and other forms of subversion in relation to public education. Dr. Norton is from Teachers College, Columbia University, where he is director of the division of administration and guidance.

Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, president of Johns Hopkins University, will address the assembly at its second meeting. Chairman of the National Research Council, he has headed a scientific mission to Japan to study the organization and technology of the country. Last January Dr. Bronk was made a member of the Committee of Honor of the British Society for Visiting Scientists.

A humorist, lecturer and world traveler, Willie Snow Ethridge will discuss "Going to Jerusalem" at the last general session. Her topic is derived from a recent tour of Palestine and other European countries that she visited with her husband, Mark Ethridge, a member of the United Nations Commission.

Forest Fire Protection

The Ontario Department of Lands and Forests has one of the most elaborate forest protection radio systems in the world. At Maple, a few miles north of Toronto, a short wave radio station is being installed at the southern research station, and operators will be able to stay in constant contact with aircraft and ground stations throughout the fire district. Fifty base radio stations, ranging from Algonquin Park to Pickle Lake, and from Pembroke to Fort Frances, are in touch with 31 radio-equipped aircraft.

Approved for GI Students

Heavier registration than usual is reported this year by the Stenotype Institute of Washington for its two beginning day school classes and three night term beginning classes.

The school, located in the Albee Building, is approved for GI students.

Elmira Faculty Oriented

Elmira College has set up an orientation program which will be initiated this fall, to give new members of the faculty an opportunity to make a maximum contribution to the college. Subjects which will be covered include the administrative offices and their functions, student guidance, facilities of the library and laboratories and the role of student government.

Security Investment Course

Hunter College will offer this fall an adult education course in security investment for both men and women in its evening and extension division. The course, which will cover stock market trading, investment planning, types of securities and sources of financial information, will be taught by Leonard Fischer of Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane.

Our Girls Abroad

They're marrying in state, fighting bulls and challenging the Channel. For our European friends, it is all a bit puzzling

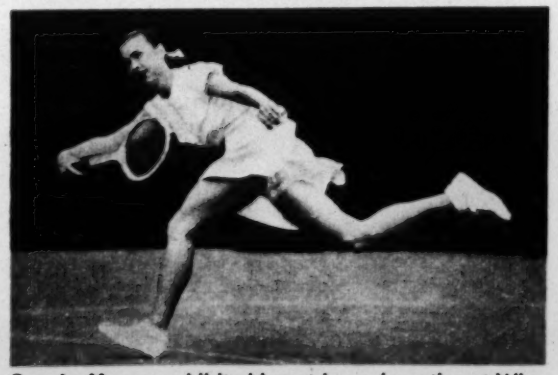
"MANY TIMES have we seen ze American man," breathed a Parisian waiter named Gaston Poncet recently, "but now we see ze American girl. Ah, formidable!"

Gaston Poncet's view is shared by his fellow Europeans. For to them 1949 has been the year of the Great Drought (in France), the Great Uncertainty (about Russia), and of the Great American Girl (everywhere).

Last January 1, nobody in Rome, Paris or Kessel-Lo, Belgium, would have dreamed of seeing such mighty sights as Linda Christian snagging Tyrone Power, or Rita Hayworth collecting the Aly Khan.

Even less would they have expected invasion by such forthright Americans as Bebe Shopp (Miss America, 1948), or Edith Entin, a lady bull-fighter from Brooklyn, N.Y. Observed Gaston: "Zees American girl, she ees very different . . . !"

Swimmer Shirley France (center, with parents) wowed British high school set, sought Gertrude Ederle's title.



Gussie Moran exhibited lace-trimmed panties at Wimbledon tennis matches. Crowd called it "more feminine."

Christian-Power nuptials brought out most of Rome. Later, world's eyes turned to Ingrid Bergman at Stromboli.

ELSA MAXWELL: SHE IS NEVER AFRAID OF "THEY."

Now You're Talking!

There's treasure buried in speeches. It is a treasure of philosophy, of practical advice for living, of faith and cheer. The editors of PARADE, believing there are many such passages worth the attention of every American, begin here the occasional reporting of speeches worth hearing. First choice is from a recent talk by Elsa Maxwell, famous hostess, broadcast by CBS:

I HAD A WONDERFUL FATHER. I was his only child. In 1907 my father sent for me and said, "I'm going to die and I've nothing to leave you. You've got to go out into the world and make your own living. How are you going to do it? First of all, you're nothing much to look at, never will be. Secondly, you have no name. And, thirdly, you haven't any money.

"Now, without looks, position, or money, what are you going to do?" "Well," I replied, "I don't know, Father. Tell me." "I'm going to leave you a legacy," he said. "It's three rules. If you follow them, the world will be your oyster. They're very simple: No. 1. Never be afraid of 'they.'"

"Who is 'they'?" I inquired.

The Unseen Enemy

"You, him, it, me — anybody," he answered. "People are more afraid of 'they' than anything else in the world. Strong generals will face courageously the most outrageous foes, yet be terrified of what 'they' might say, 'they' might do."

"The second rule," he said, "is even more important. Never collect inanimate objects. You can't, for they collect you." So, I thought, the more you own the more you are owned; therefore, I own nothing.

And the third one was this: "Always laugh at yourself first. Everybody has a ridiculous side and the whole world loves to laugh at somebody else. You do the laughing first, and the laughter of others falls off harmlessly." I followed that, too.

Every Friday Washington forecasters hold a "Who's to Blame?" session to find where predictions went wrong (see story). Phil Clapp is fourth from right.

A WET OCTOBER?

For $4.80, the Weather Bureau gives you its best guesses

By JOHN DEVANEY

PHIL CLAPP is a tall, studious young meteorologist who is convinced that the social life of a weatherman is not altogether a happy one. "When the Bureau is wrong on a forecast," he says, "all I get from my friends is abuse. They never remember 85% of the predictions we hit right on the button."

But this occupational hazard doesn't scare Phil Clapp nor the rest of the Weather Bureau staff. Proof: the weathermen are now climbing farther out on a treacherous limb; they're attempting to predict weather 30 days in advance.

True, the forecasts are only experimental. They're being turned out by Phil Clapp and 30 other experts at the Bureau's Extended Forecast Section in Washington, D. C., and Phil frankly admits that the predictions are now "only a little better than a calculated guess."

Nevertheless, more than 400 individuals and companies are shelling out $4.80 a year for them. They come twice a month. You can get them from: the Superintendent of Documents, Washington.

You may be disappointed at what you receive, though. The November forecast, for example, won't tell you whether the 22nd will be a good day for a picnic; nor will it give you any hint concerning the prospects for rain on Thanksgiving Day. It will only tell you:

1. Average temperature will be much-above-normal, above-normal, normal, below-normal, or much-below-normal compared to previous Novembers in your area.

2. Average rainfall will be light, moderate or heavy compared to normal for the month.

With these general predictions, you get a table from which you can figure out the averages and compare them with the forecasts.

Admittedly, predicting only averages is not very precise forecasting. Then why the demand?

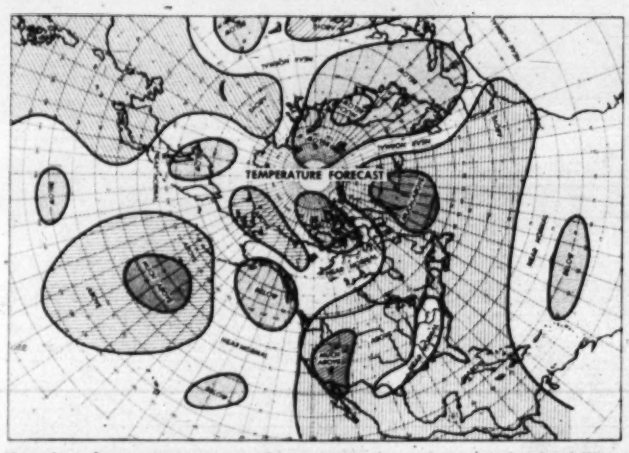
Well, the coal industry, for one, likes to know the monthly prospects for sales. And air-conditioning outfits, and fan-makers, like to know what the market demand may be. The farmer, too, is a big customer; he has a direct financial interest in the weather. This summer, for example, a drought cost farmers in the northeastern states millions of dollars. A $4.80 investment in the 30-day forecast service might have helped many of them in crop planning. The predictions for the northeastern area from mid-June to mid-July was "light rain." To the forecasters, that usually means anything from two inches to nothing; the northeast got one to two inches.

The long-range forecasters would like to make their predictions even more accurate. Right now their percentage of correct predictions is "far below" the 85% accuracy of the daily forecasts.

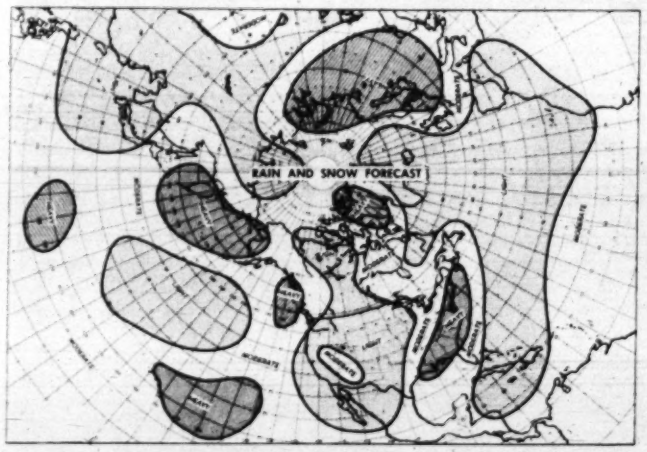
There's a lot of room for error when you're predicting weather 30 days in advance, for it requires a tremendous amount of data. For example, every six hours the Extended Forecast Section charts reports on the weather from 1,200 stations throughout the Northern Hemisphere (and that includes Russia).

The daily forecasters also use these reports, of course. But in making their own predictions, the long-range weathermen play down local peculiarities (an important factor in daily forecasting). Explains Phil Clapp: "Unlike the 24-hour forecasters, we're not too much interested in surface conditions. From the reports coming in we plot the positions of major air currents moving across the hemisphere at two miles and higher.

"We know that certain air currents cause certain types of weather," adds Phil. "Thus by plotting the direction and speed of major air currents, we can predict what the weather will be at



Here's what a recent monthly temperature forecast looked like. Land areas in northern hemisphere are marked "above" normal temperature, "much above," "below" or "much below." The user consults an adjoining map to determine normal temperature, by comparison determines how warm or cold it will probably be.



The process is repeated when subscriber wants to find out the outlook for rain or snow. He consults the Bureau's accompanying "normal" chart, then refers to map above. It shows him whether his area will have heavy, light, moderate or other precipitation. Comparing this with "normal," he knows what to expect.

points touched by them. These currents move slowly, so predictions can be made up to a month ahead."

Phil Clapp and the other long-range forecasters, directed by Chief of the Section, Jerome Namias, don't restrict themselves to 30-day predictions. They also turn out a five-day forecast, which is issued to press and radio. This five-day forecast is "slightly less accurate" than the daily forecasts.

To make them more accurate, the weathermen stage what they call "post-mortems."

Every Friday afternoon they file into a sort of classroom, and seat themselves at desks. Hanging from the blackboard in the front of the room are weather maps; standing in front of these maps (like a convict before a firing squad) is the forecaster who made last week's prediction.

Addressing his colleagues, he points to the conditions on the maps which led him to make his forecast. If the forecast was very accurate, he gets nods of approval.

Even Weathermen Sometimes Stutter

But if his forecast called for a mild, sunny week and it rained every day, he faces a very rough hour.

You're apt to hear something like this:

"Well, my explanation is a little on the weak side, seeing what happened, but . . ."

"I made my mistake once I let the cold air . . ."

"Now, I don't know if that was too smart, but . . ."

It may not have been—but the forecaster will guard against the same mistake again.

Question now is where the 30-day forecasts may lead. One Bureau worker (not a forecaster) is predicting weather trends 10 years in advance—as a hobby!

WHY DO THEY FIGHT?

There are 5,000 smalltime fighters like "Little Herky" Kamensky. Why do they keep on getting their faces pasted for peanuts? In this picture-story about "Little Herky" of McKees Rocks, Pa., you will find some of the answers to questions you may have often asked....

ALL OVER AMERICA each night last week big guys and little guys were slamming themselves around on canvas stages. Every night between 8 p.m., eastern standard time, and 11 p.m., Pacific standard time, perhaps 100 fights were in progress–involving some 200 sluggers.

Some were "name" fighters, such as Jake LaMotta, and Steve Belloise, and Ray Robinson. For them a night's purse might run to $25,000, and a year's earnings from $75,000 to $150,000. But for every Ray Robinson and Jake LaMotta there were literally scores of "Little Herky" Kamenskys from big cities and from towns like McKees Rocks, Pa. Their take runs from $150 (and that's a lot) down to peanuts (some fight for recognition only). Some fight for wrist watches and radios.

What about these little guys who go on slugging night after night? What keeps them going? What (and to what extent) do they think? How do they stand the constant punishment?

THERE IS A BANTAMWEIGHT fighter in McKees Rocks, Pa., who in many ways is typical of the smalltime hopeful.

His name is Robert James ("Little Herky") Kamensky. He's about average in appearance: small, tough as nails, and friendly. His background is about average: poor family, industrial neighborhood, high school graduate, wartime service in the Seabees. He is 24 years old.

As a fighter he's brave, not spectacular. His bravery and his tough punch have given him a good record. (In 15 pro fights he has won 10, lost three, drawn two.) As an amateur he hung a couple of small titles under his belt: one was the AAU 112-pound senior championship.

He's popular in his neighborhood, talks his fights over in the kitchen with his Dad, a former boxer now on a World War I pension. He has a trainer who works in the post office and a manager who runs a furniture store in Pittsburgh. In his manager, Al Slutsky, he is especially fortunate: most managers take 50% of the earnings of their charges. Slutsky as yet hasn't taken a nickel from Herky Kamensky. "We can wait a while for that," he smiles. "He's going to be a big champ some day." It's a big night if Herky makes as much as $150.

No big champ yet, after 10 years of it, Herky Kamensky hopes he isn't getting punchy as so many fighters do. He began fighting when he was 14 and has taken some terrific punishment. He mutters to himself when he steps in the training ring ("Gosh, I don't feel so good . . . won't last two rounds . . . timing is way off . . . can't seem to punch very hard . . ."), but that gutteral monologue, he feels, is no sign of being punchy.

There is no "average" fighter, really. Every man has his special nature, his advantages and disadvantages. Herky Kamensky has some amazing personal qualities.

He's clean-living, to begin with, and has a job ($8.60 a day) heaving scrap steel around in a railroad junk yard. But he is slight, wears gold-rimmed spectacles, has a sensitive chin that was never built for pasting. If he looks, in street clothes, like a mild little YMCA locker-clerk, the kids in McKees Rocks learned long ago that beneath that cherubic exterior are muscles, and heart, as tough as the steel in the railroad yard.

Herky is single, lives with his folks in a row of old "company" houses, and as a kid swam in the dingy Ohio river that runs through the "bottoms" of McKees Rocks. His life has always been clean; he's respected by his neighbors. He was a handsome kid in his youth. He doesn't look like a fighter. He was not an argumentative kid.

Why, then, does a kid like that fight?

"I like to feel other guys' fists beating all over my face," he says, simply.

The Spectators Can't Believe It

THERE'S MORE to it than that, of course. He first tried on the gloves out of curiosity, in a McKees Rocks gym. At that time he was making extra pennies as a huckster, selling fruit and running a magazine route. He found he could win a few prizes now and then boxing. Before he had turned 15, he was in the ring.

Then he amazed himself and his friends. In 100 amateur fights he recalls losing only "six or seven."

That's how he got his start. Now, a pro, he is working up to the time he hopes he can meet the present bantam champ, Manuel Ortiz.

Spectators sometimes laugh when they see the cherubic little fellow from McKees Rocks crawl into the ring (he's fought in Pittsburgh, Boston, California, and in cities not too far from home, such as Wheeling, W.Va.). His opponents, too, are surprised.

But when the bell sounds, a transformation takes place. The mild face has turned cold, hard. The lamb going to slaughter becomes first a mule –he won't back away–and then a lion.

He has a way of peeking out between his gloves. His opponents, some of whom have seemed amused, see a pair of sharp grey eyes sizing them up–and then Little Herky opens fire. A southpaw, he has a left of railroad steel, but there's steel in his right hand, too. He carries his fight to the enemy, often against heavy odds, and never backs up.

At home with his family, Little Herky (seated right) is a mild, bespectacled lad. His brother is standing.

"He was always like that as a kid," his dad says. "He would never retreat."

In one fight in Wheeling he went in the ring a poor underdog. His opponent, popular with the crowd, was a rugged boy named Reggie Martino, who had just disposed of three opponents by the simple means of knocking them out in the first round. No one wanted to fight Martino, but Little Herky took him on.

Everyone, including Martino, thought the cherub was going to be murdered. But Martino ran into the surprise of his life. By all logic Little Herky should have folded up under the terrific punishment he was taking in the early rounds.

"You never saw anything like it," says Trainer Clark. "Herky always gets stronger as soon as he begins to get hurt. He began uncorking that left, and the crowd stood on their chairs and went wild."

Herky won a unanimous decision.

But Suppose He Can't Make the Grade?

"HARRY," HE TOLD his trainer afterward, "we're on our way. I honestly feel I can become champ in my class. I'll fight anybody my weight."

Clark is sure Little Herky can make the top.

"He's not afraid of anybody or anything," he says. "The only question he'll ask me and Mr. Slutsky, besides wanting to know whether we think he's in good condition, is whether we're going to get a good slice out of the gate."

Clark says he can tell when training is going right by Little Herky's jokes.

"Training is never dull with Herky," he says. "He pulls cracks with a straight face and you have to walk away to keep from busting out laughing and upsetting the routine." Some of Herky's jokes have a bawdy tinge, but they carry no smut. If things aren't going right in training, the humor begins to fade.

But when things are going right, Herky Kamensky actually loves to hit and be hit. And that is why, last year, he turned pro.

"I figured it all out," he says. "As long as I have to make a living, why not make it in the way I like best. If I get to be a big champ I can do things for Mom and Dad. I want to see them happy the rest of their lives."

That's sentiment, but it's not sentimental. It's one very real reason why Little Herky and fighters like him turn pro.

What do folks say about Little Herky?

MANAGER SLUTSKY thinks he's a straight shooter and easy to train. He doesn't break rules.

"Every inch of him is heart and guts," he says. "He isn't afraid of anybody. But he's very sensitive–unusual in a fighter. He'll stick up for a friend who is getting a raw deal. He's very loyal.

"He is a born fighter–with a great heart, and I think he'll make the grade. If and when I ever think he can't, I'll make him quit. I hate like

QUAKER OATS

Quaker and Mother's Oats are the same

On the morning of a fight, Herky always gets up early and has breakfast with his mother. It's a superstition which he believes will bring him luck in the ring.

Little Herky likes fighting and all the neighbors like Herky the devil to see any boy go into the ring just to take a beating for a few bucks.

SCHOOLMATE AL FRYDLEWICZ, now a sports writer for the McKees Rocks Gazette, recalls him as an "ambitious little boy, always on the go. He was such a mild boy. Everybody here roots for him—I've never heard anyone say a word against him." Frydlewicz grins: "We're banking on him to put McKees Rocks on the map, you know."

HIS DAD, 60-year-old John Kamensky, who boxed in his own youth, is partly responsible for Herky's fighting.

"Sports keep kids out of trouble," he says. "When he was young I told him to take up some sport. If kids hang around corners they get in trouble. I never used to worry about his taking care of himself if he was in shape. As for turning pro, he knows what he's doing."

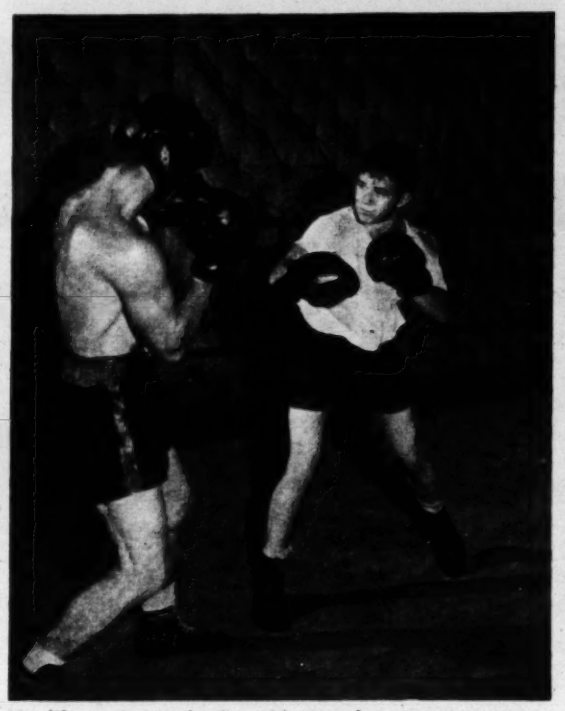
MOTHER JULIA KAMENSKY has never seen her boy fight. (At 50, she helps support the family, working 11 hours a day in a nearby restaurant.) "I've never seen him fight—not me," she says. "I wanted him to quit all along, but now I don't tell him anything. He and his daddy fight every bout over again at night in the kitchen. It's in his heart to fight. I don't want to break him. I hope he'll make the grade."

The scrap yard job is always there if Herky flops. But today "flop" is a word he doesn't know!

When not fighting, Herky works as a laborer in a railroad scrap yard.

With manager (left), trainer and second, Herky trains every night in gym.

In gym, Herky works out with rope. Natural bantamweight, he stands 5 ft., 3 in., ususally weighs 116.

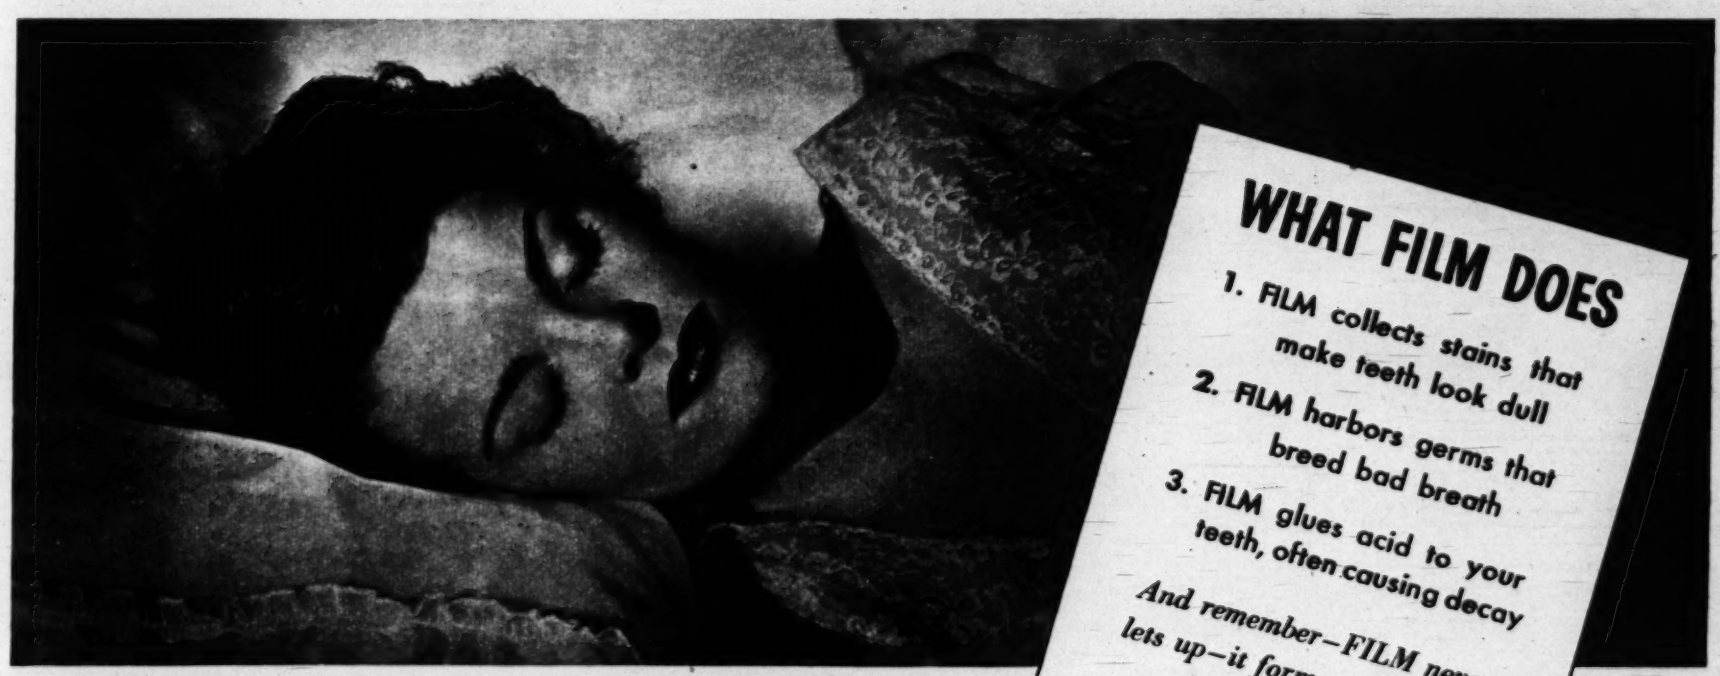


He likes give-and-take with sparring partners, never pulls punches. "That ain't the way I fight," he says.

In his corner awaiting bell, Herky gets last-minute advice. This moment, he feels, makes life worth living.

FILM NEVER LETS UP

Even while you sleep, it's forming on your teeth — Pepsodent removes it!



WHAT FILM DOES

1. FILM collects stains that make teeth look dull
2. FILM harbors germs that breed bad breath
3. FILM glues acid to your teeth, often causing decay

And remember—FILM never lets up—it forms continually on everyone's teeth.

Don't think you are safe from film. Film's dull coating forms on your teeth all day long and sneaks up even faster in the night! Mouth bacteria are multiplying in it . . . "bad breath" germs that ferment food particles . . . also acid-producing germs that frequently cause tooth decay. So use Pepsodent every morning—and always at night before you go to bed. No other tooth paste can duplicate Pepsodent's film-removing formula. No other tooth paste contains Irium* or Pepsodent's gentle polishing agent. Use Pepsodent twice a day—see your dentist twice a year.

PERFECT for autumn walks is this two-piece casual suit of ribbed chenille. Gold buttons stud the jacket. In sizes 10-18; the cost: $30.

KNITTED DRESSES

—the newest autumn knitwear looks handsome in spite of its low price-tag

FOR THE FIRST COOL DAYS of autumn, a knitted dress is practically indispensable. And this season's ready-knits, looking for all the world like expensive, hand-made dresses, are ideal for every occasion from travel to classroom, shopping to sports.

Colors are as bright as autumn leaves; styling is elegant and figure-flattering. Variations of stitch, clever collar and cuff treatments lend them a sophisticated quality that machine-knits used to lack.

Women who formerly shied from buying knit clothes no longer need fear. Dresses, like the Lass O'Scotland models shown here, look expensive but are not. They don't sag or snag and may be safely dry-cleaned or steamed.

FIGURE FLATTERY is virtually guaranteed by this chic knitted afternoon dress. Double rows of featherstitching enhance its slim simplicity and the tiny collar, bracelet-length sleeves are just right for touches of jewelry. In beige and other shades, it costs about $40.

MIX AND MATCH is the rule for this versatile threesome, consisting of a classic cardigan, short-sleeved pullover and ribbed skirt. Hand-fashioned (meaning the seams are finished off by hand) in a heather-tone tweed yarn, the ensemble sells for around $40.

FLOUNCES are seldom associated with knitwear but here they add a unique and handsome touch at cuff and hemline of a simple, sheath-like dress. Priced at about $40, in sizes 10 to 18, it comes in many popular fall shades, including toast, wine and green.

This is a chemist's model of a molecule of epinephrine. Scientists spent months changing it around and finally produced the drug they wanted — Orthoxine.

The New Asthma

It's called Orthoxine, and it's the best news so far for millions of asthmatics

By CHARLES M. STEARNS

OF THE 14 MILLION Americans who suffer from some form of allergy, a respectable proportion are the victims of the form called asthma. In the presence of their own particular natural enemy – dust, pollen, fur, in-laws, bosses or some internal irritant–they start to gasp and fight for breath. They stop gasping only when the cause is found and removed (which is often impossible), or when some drug helps their struggling lungs.

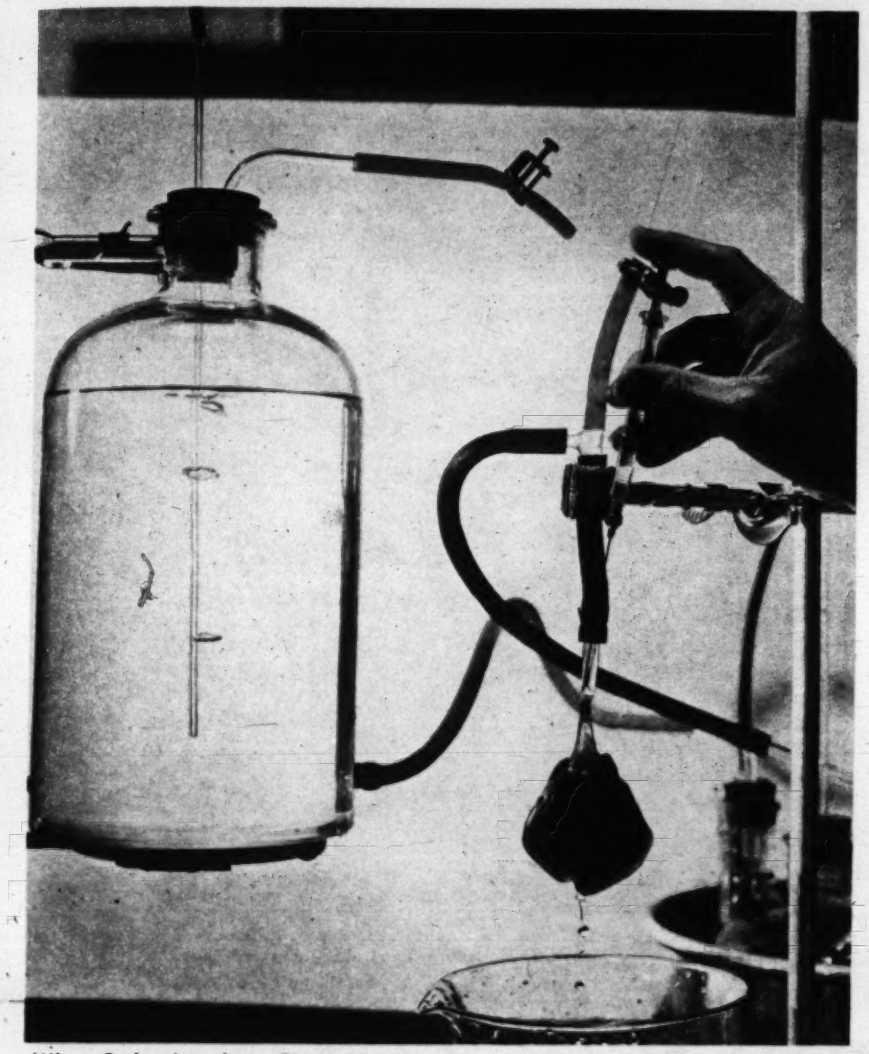
So far, no one drug has been found to relieve all types of asthma. In fact, most of the drugs available have left a big percentage (perhaps 40%) unaided. Also, many of the drugs have had side-reactions, ranging from simple sleepiness to violent, weakening nausea.

That is why the search for new asthma drugs goes on endlessly, and this is the story of one of them –Orthoxine.

Perched on top of each of your kidneys sits a walnut-sized chemical plant called the adrenal gland. That gland turns out minute amounts of hormones that affect dozens of body functions in ways still unknown.

One of the adrenal hormones, epinephrine, hits your nervous system and thereby does three things to the body. One, but only one of those three things, is useful to asthma patients. Chemists of the Upjohn Company, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, have chemically sorted that one desirable effect out of epinephrine and put it to work in the form of a drug called Orthoxine.

Epinephrine (also called Adrenalin) has three major effects. First, it closes down small blood vessels near the surface of your body, so that if you are cut, less blood will flow through the wound. Second, it keys up your nerves ("doped" racehorses win on epinephrine).



What Orthoxine does: This rabbit lung was so stopped up it would not let fluid (or air) through. With Orthoxine, water now drips through. Lung now can breathe.

na Wonder Drug

Third, it relaxes the smooth muscle in your lungs. This, among other things, expands the air passages in your lungs, so that air can get through with more ease.

That last is where epinephrine enters the asthma picture. The effect of asthma is that the lungs, which are perforated with perhaps miles of minute air passages, become plugged up. Each air passage is constricted and filled with fluid, and the air can't get through. The asthmatic gasps and heaves, trying to get the oxygen-carrying air through the plugged channels, and can't. In extreme cases, the victim turns a bluish color and might possibly die for lack of oxygen.

Lets Patient Breathe Again

Epinephrine enlarges the air passages and the asthma victim can breathe normally again.

But two things epinephrine does are not good. When it closes down the blood vessels, blood pressure rises. The heart works harder.

Epinephrine also tenses the body's muscular and nervous system, and this frightens the patient.

Finally, epinephrine and many of its substitutes must be injected, cannot be taken by mouth.

This, then, brings the tale back to Orthoxine—which can be taken by mouth, which dilates the bronchioles and thus relieves asthma, but which does not raise blood pressure and produces no tension.

It looks very much as though Orthoxine, as a day-to-day treatment for chronic asthma, may be about the best drug so far. It won't cure asthma. Also, it won't work in acute attacks, when the injection of some compound like Isuprel or Aminophyllin is in order. But it can take the heart out of an ordinary attack. In fact, taken beforehand, it can prevent attacks altogether in "ideal" patients.

Also, though there was no reason at all for expecting it, Orthoxine has proved to be helpful in many cases of hay fever, where the nose and not the lungs are involved, and to a lesser extent in other forms of allergy, such as hives and migraine headaches.

CHILD BEAUTIES

What makes them? Not curls, but childhood itself

MUST YOUR LITTLE GIRL have blonde curls and blue eyes to be beautiful? "No!" says Tana Hoban, who has been photographing the very young for nine years. "It isn't pretty faces and nice clothes that make little girls attractive. It's childhood itself – a quick, toothy grin, a small serene face asleep, the smile from deep inside. And when you catch such things, you catch beauty – and also the image of childhood." Here, by Miss Hoban, are some samples of both.

NAVY'S TRIAL OFFER

Want to enlist? Now you can try it for 2 weeks

By KARL KOHRS

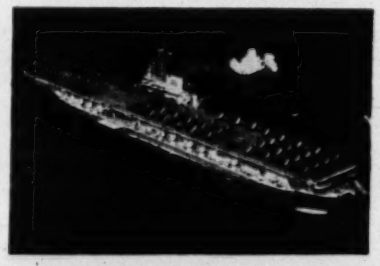
TAKE 100 LADS of high school age, sign them on an aircraft carrier for a week's cruise, and you have as salty a crew as was ever piped topside for muster at 0800.

They come back home ("hit the beach," that is) with a nautical swagger and a briny vocabulary. Dinner is chow, personal effects are gear, a wall is a bulkhead. They don't stop work. They secure. They don't go to bed at 11 o'clock. They hit the sack at 2300.

This sort of thing has been going on since a group of high school boys from the District of Columbia and four neighboring states returned recently from a five-day cruise aboard the aircraft carrier Franklin D. Roosevelt, flagship of Carrier Division One.

The cruise was the climax of an eight-week "boot" training course at the Naval Air Station, Anacostia, D.C., offered by the Navy to any high school boy interested in finding out what life in the Navy is like. This program was duplicated at 19 other Naval air stations throughout the country, with a total of 2,100 boys participating.

Boys who passed Navy physical and intelligence tests "came aboard" the stations and were given meals and lodging, regulation Navy clothes and regular seaman's pay – $75 a month. They received instruction in 20 different courses in aviation and seamanship. On completion of training, they were eligible for an Organized Reserve Squadron, whose members train one week-end a month. The Navy wants "trial enlistments" again next year.



U.S.S. Franklin D. Roosevelt

The Anacostia group got much more than a routine brush with Navy life, because the FDR put out to sea from Norfolk, Va., at the head of Task Group 89 for battle maneuvers.

Lined up along the rail on the island above the 3-acre flight deck, they watched fighter planes and torpedo bombers of the Naval Air Reserve squadrons make practice landings and takeoffs. They saw crews dash to action stations when "general quarters" sounded, watched bombing and strafing attacks, donned life jackets and rushed to "abandon ship" stations when the ship took a simulated bomb hit amidships.

Between battles, the boots toured the ship from fire room to bridge and learned all the short cuts to the chow line.

Did they like the Navy? Of the 100 boys, 85 signed up for active reserve duty.

On fantail, Landing Signal Officer explains how he uses flags to signal incoming pilot how to position wings for a correct landing.

In main engine control room, engineer officer of the watch points to dials. Throttleman (left) is receiving signals from bridge.

Raymond Leonardo, Philadelphia: "Great chance for a kid who wants to learn. I'm going into naval aviation."

Herb Yanovich, Washington: "I think it's great. Took me a while to get used to Navy chow and sack, but I'm okay now."

Michael Mehalic, Washington: "Join the Navy? No; it's show business for me. I'm going to be a ventriloquist."

Peter M. Wells, Alexandria, Va.: "This will give me a head start: I'm going to Annapolis. Now I know I like the Navy!"

Mack Sennett girls, now back in "Down Memory Lane," were considered too risque in 1917.

Sennett Is Shocked!

The kind of attention women now get, he says, isn't complimentary

By ERNEST La FRANCE and SID ROSS

THE MAN WHO SHOCKED the American public with the first bathing beauty movies back in 1917, is having the oddest experience of his life: he is shocked by the bathing beauties of 1949.

Mack Sennett, coming out from his mountains of yellowing scrap books to assemble scenes from his old Keystone comedies for Eagle-Lion's nostalgic "Down Memory Lane," says he can't understand how women can wear so little!

Now 65 (he spent almost 40 years in movies), the dean of the glamorous, or non-swimming, bathing girls thinks today's woman—at least as you see her—is all a mistake. He wishes women were more modest—in the pattern of the old Sennett girls. He still loves the classic pattern of Mabel Normand, Marie Prevost, and Phyllis Haver.

"My girls were all girl," he told PARADE, "they weren't athletes and they weren't padded. They were buoyant and feminine and lovely, and they wore enough clothes to cover them."

Reminiscing in his Hollywood home, he says the invention of the bathing beauty was almost forced on him. Magazines and newspapers, then as now, preferred a pretty face to a photo of a cop. Sennett had a gallery of comics, including Ben Turpin, Chester Conklin, and Mack Swain. "I found," he says, "I could get their pictures in the papers by standing them next to the most curvesome girls I could find." It got him so much free publicity, that he incorporated the girls in the comedies, eventually adding handsome young Bing Crosby as bait for the lady movie-goers.

Danger at the Athletic Club!

On publicity tours, the bathing beauties, none of whom could swim, were almost as much a liability as an asset. "In Detroit," he remembers, "everybody was nice to them and the committee in charge had even arranged for them to use the pool at the Detroit Athletic Club. We had to decline because we were afraid they'd all fall in that big pool and drown!"

All in all, Sennett made 700 comedies, most of them with bathing girls.

"There were terrific squawks from the women's clubs and I was accused of being risque," he says. "Now I'm the one who is shocked when I see a girl wearing a couple of postage stamps and a figleaf!"

It may come as a surprise to many people, especially to some of the ladies' club members, that Sennett still thinks his capering beauties were models of innocent appeal. "They were beautiful as our mothers were beautiful," he reminisces sentimentally. "In those days, lovely feminine curves were the criterion of beauty. Even before my time, Lillian Russell and Frankie Bailey expressed this trend. I wanted to show beautiful women so that they would be admired by other women as well as men. Most of my girls had magnificent figures. They were feminine figures. They had lovely curves. They looked like females and they didn't bulge."

"The perfect figure is almost the perfect hour-glass type," he says.

This line-up, led by Ben Turpin and Phyllis Haver, never got wet.

"But today, the sand is all in the wrong end!"

Sennett scoffs at "falsies."

"The kind of attention that many modern girls attract is not really complimentary," he says. "With some of them, you know it just can't be so!"

He had nothing but scorn for the thin, boyish-bobbed ideal of the '20s. They didn't look very much like girls. He has an almost equal amount of scorn for the girl of 1949, who, he points out, tries to look as athletic as a boy and then turns around and dishonestly pads herself to look like Lillian Russell, in an attempt to combine the looks of the '90s and the looks of the '20s. "They look ridiculous," he claims.

Sennett really thinks he knows what he is talking about. One of Hollywood's few wise men, he may, at that. After all, he was the man who picked out such successful beauties as Gloria Swanson, Thelma Parr, Madeleine Hurlock, Cecile Evans, Lucille Miller, Toby Wing, Dot Farley, Helen Kane. He also picked such comedians as Ben Turpin, W. C. Fields, Eddie Gribbon, Charlie Murray, Franklin Pangborn, and Bobby Vernon, not to mention such directors as Frank Capra, Roy Del Ruth, George Marshall, and Lloyd Bacon.

Mack Sennett, at 65, looks back on introduction of bathing girl in his films, still likes originals.

Born Mickall Sinnott, in Denville, Quebec, the tycoon of the cavorting damsels moved to Northampton, Mass., as a child, got his first job driving boiler rivets.

According to legend, his mother went to her Northampton neighbor and lawyer, a young man named Calvin Coolidge (also destined for fame) and asked him to help young Mike. Coolidge introduced him to a visiting actress named Marie Dressler. She gave him a letter to David Belasco, who got him a job in a burlesque show.

Later, Mike went to see his first movie, shortly thereafter getting a job in the old Biograph Studio on New York's East 14th Street (starting place also for Mary Pickford and D. W. Griffith).

In 1912, already a director, Mike borrowed $2,500 from a pair of bookies to whom he was already in debt, borrowed the keystone insignia from a Pennsylvania Railroad car as a trademark, and set out for sunny California with comedian Ford Sterling, Mabel Normand, and Fred Mace.

With his keystone, he started Keystone Comedies; by 1917 his Bathing Beauties were famous. What he'd like the girls of 1949 to do is: turn back that hour glass!

You owe it to your daughter to tell her these Intimate Facts of Life!

Before she marries—make sure she has this modern, scientific information . . .

Isn't it a blessing that in this modern age of enlightenment, helpful truths can be outspoken? Today, vaginal douches 2 or 3 times weekly are so widely recommended and practiced for intimate feminine cleanliness that the all-important question has really become—WHAT to put in the douche!

So, mother, make sure your daughter realizes: no other type liquid antiseptic-germicide of all those tested for the douche is so powerful yet so safe to tissues as ZONITE. (If you have the slightest doubt, send for PROOF in the free booklet below.)

Cautions Against Weak or Dangerous Products

If, through old-fashioned advice passed on down through the years, you are still using 'kitchen makeshifts' such as salt, soda or vinegar —let us warn you these are NOT germicides in the douche.

On the other hand, no well-informed woman would want to resort to dangerous products—overstrong solutions of which may burn, harden tissue and, in time, even impair functional activity of the mucous glands.

Truly, ZONITE is a miracle! ZONITE has a powerful germ-killing action yet is ABSOLUTELY SAFE to tissues. It's positively non-poisonous and non-irritating. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as you wish—there's not the slightest risk of injury.

Zonite's Miracle-Action

ZONITE eliminates odor, removes waste substances and discharge. You feel so dainty and refreshed. Helps guard against infection. It kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can BE SURE ZONITE DOES KILL every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

Sennett Girls vs. Modern Girls

Thelma Parr, in beaded non-swimming swim suit, was pulse-fluttering ideal in '20s.

Ava Gardner, in bare midriff, is more risque than anything in 1917 could have been.

Marie Prevost, famous siren, covered all but arms, shoulders, in early "cheesecake."

Esther Williams, able to swim and dressed for it, would have been considered tomboy.

Phyllis Haver, who left screen to marry millionaire, won fans despite full Scotch kilts.

Betty Grable refuses to pose in bathing suit, likes sweaters, is not the Sennett type.

HY GARDNER'S . . . NEWSREEL

COURTS, COPS 'N' ROBBERS: In Mobile, Alabama, a waitress won a divorce, but the clerk made a mistake in typing out the decree. As a result, the woman divorced her child and won custody of her husband . . .

In Newark, N. J., a car owner received a wire advising him that his stolen car was parked at Broad and Court Streets. To add insult to injury, the thieves sent the telegram collect.

In Los Angeles, a distraught housewife applied for a divorce on the grounds that every time she went near her husband, she'd break out in a rash. A Superior Court judge ruled that an allergy does not constitute grounds for divorce . . .

On the other hand, a San Francisco judge decided that Patty, a 12-year-old cocker spaniel, must vacate her master's apartment because the landlord's son is allergic to dog hair. (Now a dog knows what it's like to lead a tenant's life!)

In Wooster, Ohio, a prominent judge ruled that Trixie, a fox terrier, doesn't have to pay the State of Ohio any inheritance tax on the $1,000 left her in her master's will. (If this precedent is upheld we're liable to wind up with all our money going to the dogs) . . .

Still on the subject, it is now perfectly legal for a dog to ride with his master on a San Francisco trolley or bus, provided he's on a leash and pays a 10c fare.

In Brooklyn, a five-year-old youngster announced, through his attorney, that he was suing to force Reno, Nevada, to void his parents' divorce. The youngster is asking for $50,000 in damages . . .

'TAIN'T A JOKE, SON: Eddie Davis, greater than ever in his 20th year at Leon and Eddie's, famous 52nd Street night club, has a new squelch for hecklers: "I think the world of you," he says gently, "but you know what shape the world is in these days!" . . .

In New York, a safe company received a letter from a man in Chicago, requesting a free booklet: "What You Should Know About Safes." The booklet was sent, but no sale was made—the follow-up salesman discovered that his prospect was located in Cell G-14 of the County Jail . . .

(LISTEN to Hy Gardner over your local MBS station tonight.)

QUIZ ANSWERS. (1) Motor gives off as much heat as it takes from box. (2) Blood heat, 98° F. (3) Ionosphere reflects radio waves downward. (4) True. Equator—24,902 miles; through poles—24,860. (5) During rain. Violent air movements split raindrops, concentrate charges. (6) Carbon dioxide. (7) Hot gases.

September Picnic

BY BETH MERRIMAN
PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR

Early autumn's fine weather encourages eating out-of-doors

THE BLUE SKIES and warm sunshine of late summer tempt us to forsake the dining room for greener pastures out-of-doors. Food must be easy to "tote," easy to serve, and easy to eat. And, of course, easy to prepare. Here is a menu that meets all these requirements, with a "plus" of appetite appeal: kola baked beans, potato chips, dill pickles, cucumber and tomato slices, applesauce turnovers and ice-cold, assorted carbonated beverages. Make you hungry?

KOLA BAKED BEANS

¼ lb. fat salt pork
1 medium onion
2 1-lb. cans Boston-style baked beans
¼ cup molasses
1 teaspoon dry mustard
1 tablespoon vinegar
2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
¼ cup chili sauce
kola-type beverage

Scrape rind of salt pork; score deeply with sharp knife. Place onion in deep casserole; add beans. Bury pork in beans, so only rind shows. Combine molasses, mustard, vinegar, Worcestershire sauce and chili sauce. Add enough kola-type beverage to make 1½ cups. Pour over beans. Bake in slow oven, 300°F., 1½ hours. Yield: 8 servings.

APPLESAUCE TURNOVERS

Make pastry with pie-crust mix. Roll out ⅛-inch thick. Cut in 4-inch squares. Place spoonful of applesauce in center of each square, fold over to form triangle; press edges together with prongs of fork. Prick top of each with fork. Bake in hot oven, 450°F., 15-18 minutes, or until turnovers are a golden brown.

In this recipe, kola-type beverage makes the difference, adds flavor, color, sweetening to beans. Add enough kola to other seasoning to make 1½ cups; pour over beans, pork, in casserole; bake.

Apple turnovers are "easy as pie." Even easier if you use packaged pie crust mix, canned applesauce. Place spoonful of applesauce in each pastry square; fold over; press edges with fork.

Andy, microphone-shy orang-utan at the Bronx Zoo, plays hard to get when Zoo official Herbert Knobloch tries to record his voice. Reluctance melted when Knobloch chucked him under chin.

Lady rhino, stubbornly refusing to speak, appeared agitated when she heard her own voice (a previous recording) played for her.

Solemn, big-billed toucan from South America had to be coaxed to speak into mike, turned out to be clucking conversationalist.

LOUDER, PLEASE!

At the Bronx Zoo, Herb Knobloch takes down the call of the wild

A PUZZLED YOUNG MAN with a problem stood in the hay-scented elephant house of New York's Bronx Zoo not long ago, eyeing a lady elephant named Sudana.

His problem: to make Sudana talk.

His name was Herbert Knobloch, and he was associate in charge of the Zoo's Department of Education. But he couldn't make Sudana gulp, whistle or whimper, much less toss back her hefty seven-foot trunk and bellow.

It was important to Herbert Knobloch that she bellow, and it was also important to science. For Knobloch had a tape recorder set up beside Sudana and was ready to take down her cry as part of a permanent record of animal voices – if only she would utter it.

He tempted her with hay. Silence. He offered peanuts, like any gaping visitor. Not a word. He tried concealing the microphone, then making her wait for her meal. Still Sudana stood mute. Finally, after a week's cajolery, he gave her up.

Had Sudana spoken, her "remarks" would have become part of Knobloch's unique Zoo project: to record the "voices" of hundreds of birds and animals as a permanent scientific record and as a source of authentic sound effects for radio, movies, television and other educational uses. Already he has dozens of recordings stacked in his office.

But Knobloch's task hasn't been simple, as his experience with Sudana demonstrates. You can't just shove a microphone in front of an animal and expect him to speak.

Most of them suffer from "mike fright," and many are naturally mute most of the time. Recording their voices requires skill, patience and quite a lot of ingenuity.

Once Knobloch waited seven hours for the call of the Giant Laughing Kingfisher, finally recorded its insane, raucous giggle.

Some subjects he tricked into speaking. He fondled the attention-loving cockatoo, then sneaked away. When the bird called loudly for more, he turned on his recorder, captured the bird's strident cry.

The Lions Say "Good Night"

The Zoo's African lions would roar, but never for the microphone. One night Knobloch hid, instrument in hand, until the last keeper had called "good night" and slammed the door. The beasts promptly roared back their own "good night," – and Knobloch faithfully recorded it.

To catch the clucking growl of a duck-billed platypus, he disturbed its nest. He held out on lunch with a rhinocerous, collected its irritated moo. In two or three years, when he finishes with mammals and birds, he will go on to fish which, he affirms, "have 'voices.'" "When we get those," he confides, "we'll have a magnificent library."

Knobloch found that lion's snarl (above) was almost too loud for instruments. To record full roar, he set mike well back from cage.

Abyssinian wild ass cleared throat, sounded off like fog-horn. Cries of animals depended on different moods, Knobloch found.

Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

by Harold R Foster

Synopsis: STANDING IN THE PATH OF THE RETURNING PICTS, PRINCE VALIANT AND HIS MEN FACE ALMOST CERTAIN DESTRUCTION. WITH CHEERFUL IMPUDENCE VAL OFFERS TO BRIBE WITH GOLD TWO RIVAL CHIEFTAINS!

"TO YOU, ODER, WILL I GIVE THIS PURSE OF GOLD IF YOU WILL TAKE YOUR MEN AWAY. AND HERE IS A HANDFUL OF COINS FOR 'THE HAMMER' IF HE WILL DO THE SAME."

ALTHOUGH THE BRIBE IS TRIVIAL THE INSULT IS NOT! "THE HAMMER'S" FACE IS DARK WITH ANGER: "WHY OFFER ME LESS THAN ODER?"

"BECAUSE HE IS THE GREATER WARRIOR," ANSWERS VAL INNOCENTLY. "HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HIM BOAST OF HIS LEADERSHIP?"

"BOAST! BOAST!" THUNDERS 'THE HAMMER', "THAT IS ALL THAT MOUTHY WINDBAG CAN DO! WHY, WITH MY BARE HANDS....!"

"DEAR ME!" MUTTERS VAL PLEASANTLY, "SUCH BAD TEMPERS! I HOPE IT IS NOT BECAUSE OF ANYTHING I SAID!"

CLAN MEMBERS RUSH TO THE AID OF THEIR CHIEFTAINS. SOON THERE ARE MORE PICTS FIGHTING PICTS THAN ARE FIGHTING VAL'S MEN, AND THESE WEARY HEROES HAVE A MUCH NEEDED REST.

NO LONGER IS IT SAFE NORTH OF "THE WALL" FOR THE PICTS ARE COMING OVER WHEREVER THEY CAN AND DEATH COMES CLOSE TO YOUNG GEOFFREY.

BUT HE WINS TO A DISTANT MILECASTLE AND IS LET THROUGH INTO BRITAIN. AHEAD OF HIM IS THE LONG ROAD TO CAMELOT AND MANY DANGERS!

NEXT WEEK- The Long Ride.
